

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE

In these two volumes is comprised the major instalment of a work, which should present at least the last six Books of Herodotus, duly annotated and explained. By this issue the editor discharges the heavier portion of his covenanted labours. The task has been long a-doing, hindered and interrupted, as it has been, by sufficient causes, which here to specify further might seem to be assuming a too general expectancy of the book. Enough now, if some friends, interested in the progress of this work, be not disappointed in its execution; and if the public, a somewhat critical one, to which it appeals, find it, upon the whole, serviceable and welcome.

The increase of materials and the rising standard of method will presently render it well-nigh desperate for any one man to elaborate a complete edition of Herodotus upon the scale of former editors. One must needs be not merely grammarian and historian, but archaeologist, anthropologist, philosopher and something more to boot, in order adequately to explain and illustrate 'the Father of History,' his work. The next commentary on 'The Muses,' intended for scholars at large, will haply be undertaken by a syndicate, or trust, in which each department of the Herodotean Museum may be headed by an all-competent sub-specialist. But, even then, a controlling mind will be necessary in order to bring consistency and point to the result: meanwhile there is a chance that this edition may still be in time to invest the middle section of the Herodotean Histories with Introduction, Commentary and Appendices, not all unworthy, having regard to the present state of knowledge and research, a place beside the accomplished labours of a less exacting age.

The more precise relations of this edition to those others cannot be described in a sentence. Whatever may now be the right estimate of works even as recent as those of Larcher and of Schweighäuser, no competent judge will expect to find a claim here advanced to supersede the commentaries of Baehr, of Blakesley, of Rawlinson, of Stein, each of which has merits, visible, even in this very edition, by derivation or deposit. Of any preponderant debt to this one or that of his predecessors the present editor is scarcely conscious. The extent to which antecedent labours support his own, is attested, perhaps too scrupulously, twice over, in the Notes passim and in the Index of Authors, sub nominibus. Though the references there accumulated betoken not seldom dissent or criticism, they are none the less indicative of obligations incurred. A similar canon applies to the works of the historians, Grote, Thirlwall, Curtius, Duncker, Busolt, Eduard Meyer and others, and, in short, to all the modern authorities at all copiously cited. If the writer were conscious of a primary nexus to one or other of his many creditors, this would be the place to acknowledge it. Let critics, if they please, discover his scientific pedigree, if he have one. His first claim is to have focussed a good number of results, many of which are virtually common property in the Republic of Hellenic Studies, enforcing them by methods, to the development of which schools of recent and living investigators have contributed. He has taken some pleasure in accentuating the English contribution to the common stock; but no one using these volumes will accuse him of disguising his obligation to foreign sources. Throughout, properties have been, to the best of his ability, assigned to the rightful owners, after the example of that truly classic plagiary, who plundered his friends only to give them back their goods, on the principle that men thank you more for restoring to them what is their own, than if you had never robbed them at all. It would, however, be an excess of altruism, on the writer's part, to announce these volumes as the mere exploitation of other men's labours. as he is aware, no previous commentary has applied so completely the methods of analytic and discriminative criticism to the work of Herodotus. Consequently, this edition should exhibit more fully than others the structure and composition of the Herodotean opus, should discover more systematically the problems of origin and source, and should appreciate more nicely the varying values of the different parts, paragraphs, and items, of the multifarious and complex whole. Two cases, exempli gratia, may here—not without some risk—be named in support of this claim. the geography of Herodotus has been discussed again and again, the composite and unsystematic quality of the Herodotean world has not been so distinctly presented as it is in this work. Again, though scholars and historians might seem by this time to have said the last word about the battle of Marathon, the genesis and progress of the story itself appear never to have been so fully considered as in the present work. That consideration, though in the first instance a literary exercise, is none the less an essential preliminary to a definitive solution of the real problems at issue. And so forth, in other cases.

This work makes no claim to multiply paradoxes. It was no slight satisfaction to find, in the fourth volume of the collected and posthumous Kleine Schriften of an illustrious savant, Alfred von Gutschmid, published only in 1894, an Index Fontium and an Oekonomie to the work of Herodotus, anticipating to some extent, and confirming, observations and methods advocated in the Introduction to these volumes, which was then already in type. The laureate work of a well-known French Hellenist, M. Hauvette, appeared after the second of these volumes was already in the printer's hands, or account would naturally have been taken of his labours. It is some comfort to reflect that his masterly support may be utilised in the production of the portion of this work still remaining to do. An identical remark applies to the researches of an American scholar, Professor Herbert Weir Smyth, upon the Ionic dialect, to which here appeal can be made only in support of observations upon the Herodotean style printed on pp. cxvii, cxx of this volume. It is matter for congratulation that no results, however startling, brought by Mr. Arthur Evans from Krete, or by Professor Flinders Petrie from Egypt, are likely to invalidate the utterances in these volumes in regard to the problems of Hellenic origines, or of Libyan ethnology.

It remains to acknowledge gratefully assistance given from time to time towards the production of this work. Professor Ramsay, Professor Percy Gardner, Mr. Mackinder, Mr. Walker, and other Oxford colleagues, have kindly replied to inquiries, or afforded light, on points of detail. Other scholars (whom the editor is proud to claim, in one sense or other, as 'old pupils') have laid him under various obligations. Professor Titchener, now of Cornell University, made an observation embodied in a note to A large debt to Mr. Hogarth is fully set out in Appendix XIII. § 9. Without a suggestion, volunteered by Mr. Arnold C. Taylor of Uppingham, the last Appendix would probably never have been written. Mr. Tracey of Brasenose College kindly read some of the earlier proofs of the Greek text. The first and second Indices are mainly the work of Mr. A. S. L. Farguharson of University College. Other services, not here specified, are had in grateful remembrance. revision of the proof-sheets, as a whole, was a labour too long and exacting to be inflicted upon any friend, however willing. In a work, the mere printing of which has occupied upwards of twenty months, and which combines a very large number and variety of types and symbols, some allowance will be granted for an occasional lapsus calami that may have kept its place in type. A few Corrigenda will be found after the Table of Contents in each volume.

If irregularities in the Englishing of Greek words and names cause any offence, let them be taken for experimental evidence of a desire to attain the unattainable, to wit, a satisfactory transliteration of Greek forms. For the rest, there has been nothing detected, up to date, to mislead a competent reader. This result is mainly due to the admirable work done in the printer's office; and if, in other respects, the work issues well-equipped, that shows again the high standard and the ready goodwill of a long-suffering publisher.

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. To appreciate the importance of the Greek text, herewith printed and annotated, its relation to the work of Herodotus as a whole must be duly considered. To understand the whole, it is necessary to discover its general structure, and the sections into which it may most usefully be sub-divided. A successful Analysis of the full text is an essential preliminary to a just conception of the problems connected with the sources and the composition of the work, and with the character of the author, whether as historian The full exhibition and discussion of those problems should only be attempted when the analytical criticism of the work has been accomplished: this criticism, however, in its progress incidentally tends to define canons and conclusions, which affect the appreciation of the several parts of the work. Thus, although no more than the fourth, fifth and sixth Books of Herodotus are here immediately under review, they must be considered in the light of principles which are to be gathered from all the nine Books, and cannot be fully verified except by reference to the whole work, and its every part. To enumerate or to discuss these principles in this place would be to open up the whole mass of problems and arguments, which should be reserved as Prolegomena to a complete edition of the work. It must suffice to make such assumptions or statements as may be easily verified by a general acquaintance with the whole work, in order to concentrate attention and criticism upon the three Books here printed, and to elucidate their position and import, intrinsically and in relation to the antecedent and succeeding portions of the text. The intrinsic significance of these Books it is the more especial function of the Notes and Appendices to elucidate: this Introduction aims at emphasising the relative bearings of the middle section of the text upon the two remainders, which it separates, or connects. The distinction between intrinsic and relative importance or interest is, of course, itself arbitrary and artificial: many points might be brought equally well under either head, and a satisfactory judgment, even in particular problems, whether literary or historical, cannot be reached until the whole work and the particular passage in question have been surveyed from every profitable point of view: but with this large carcat to control his results the practical student may courageously proceed on his way.

§ 2. The work of Herodotus (the unique and authentic character of which inter alia is here assumed) has come down to us with a ready-made division into nine Books. These divisions hardly any one now supposes to be primitive, or made by the author himself 1: they may be dated to the Hellenistic period, and may have been made in Alexandria,2 But when, where and by whomsoever made, they were made with great skill and judgment; they correspond to the grand argument of the work; they are dictated or justified by the natural divisions of the story or subject matter, nature in this case being indistinguishable from art. In short, the nine-fold division of the work of Herodotus, though not formally his doing, is so obviously just and reasonable, that it might fairly be taken to suggest, to a greater or less extent, even the secret history of the composition of the work. At any rate, there was, so far as is known, no rival division made or suggested of Hdt. 7/8, a similar division originated in the other cases mentioned by him, viz. Thucydides 3/4, Xenophon, Anabasis 5/6, Hellenies 3/4, 6/7. It seems probable that the older historical proce works were not subdivided into 'Books' until later writers had begun to compose in 'Books.' As the summaries in the Anabasis (Bks. 2, 3, 4, 5, 7 ad init.) are obviously spurious, it is probable that no author previous to Ephoros had written prose works in 'Books.' (See Diodor. 16. 76, βιβλους γέγραφε τριάκοντα, προοίμιον εκάστη προθείς, cp. 5. 1). Herodotus and Thucydides do not quoto even the Iliad and Odyssey by reference to Books; the διδρθωσις in this case was certainly Alexandrine. Cp. Susemill, Gr. Lit. i. 330 ff.

² This is A. Bauer's suggestion: Entstehung des herodotischen Geschichtswerk, Vienna, 1878, p. 5. His other suggestion, that the Egyptian Logi led to the subdivision of the work, is almost superfluous, if the tripartition below given be rightly grounded. Wiedemann (l. c. supra) may be left to explain how and why, if a 'Grammarian' could not have been guilty of the anti-grammatical division in antiquity, a fact which is in itself some guarantee of the correctness of the existing divisions: nor has the ambition of modern editors aspired to improve on the received division into nine Books.

$ 3. It may, however, fairly be doubted whether the full significance of the nine-fold division, and of the reasons underlying it, have always been duly apprehended. The practice of most elitors points rather to an adverse decision, and the debate on the question whether the work of Herodotus is finished and complete, from the author's point of view, could hardly have run to such lengths, or ended so indecisively, as in the case heretofore, had due stress been laid upon the considerations now to be urged. It is not enough to observe that the work of Herodotus lends itself easily and obviously to the division into nine Books, each of these Books being more or less a literary unit in itself, with a natural beginning and end. A broader, a more fundamental, primary, and significant division presents itself, when the nine Books are regrouped into three successive and sharply-contrasted sections, or volumes. The three-fold division of the one great united and complete story is in truth more obvious, indisputable and convincing than the nine-fold division, which stands in a subordinate and derivative relation to the other and simpler. Convenience of reference, for literary and historical purposes, demands indeed the division into Books of moderate dimensions, in this as in other cases; and the particular division into nine has almost everything in its favour. But among the considerations which justify the uine-fold division, it can hardly be an accident that the nine parts may have been reached by the tripartition of three original parts, and that they constitute a division of a division, suggesting a ground-plan for the whole work of extraordinary and memorable symmetry, with a mutual correspondence and balance between divisions and sub-divisions, going far to assure any reader, who has possessed himself of this clue, that the work is finished as it stands, and incapable of addition or appendix, without the destruction of its literary form and artistic finish.2

² Even Ed. Meyer's Ist Herodots Geschichtswerk vollendet? Ish. Mus. 1887, p. 146 (now reprinted in his Forschungen, 1892, p. 189), does not take the above-given point into account.

§ 4. In order to realise the three-fold plan underlying the work of Herodotus it is convenient to compare the two extreme members of the triple unity, before considering the nature and character of the intervening elements, which serve, according to the critic's point of view, to connect or to separate them. Even the briefest and most general comparison (undertaken with adequate knowledge) would serve to show that the points of contrast between the first three Books of Herodotus and the last three Books are so great and startling as to make it difficult to comprehend the two sections as equal parts of a single literary work. True, in respect to dialect, vocabulary, style and so forth, the two sections, here hypothetically in juxtaposition, give evidence of a common authorship; but if material considerations be taken into account, the two sections might well belong to different works, even if by one and the same author. The last three Books (7, 8, 9) form by themselves an obvious unity both materially and formally. On the one hand, the seventh book is clearly marked off from the sixth: on the other hand the seventh passes into the eighth, the eighth into the ninth, without grammatical or stylistic break and without material interruption. The three Books, taken together, contain, in an almost unbroken and continuous narrative, the story of the great Invasion in the time of Xerxes. The subject is a single war, complicated indeed in virtue of its magnitude and the variety of arms and operations comprised in it, yet confined as hypothesi to a couple of successive campaigns, and requiring for the action of the story neither a very extensive theatre, nor a longdrawn chronology. The scenes of the story are laid, in the main, within an area familiar to Greeks in the fifth century, and requiring little description. For the most part the geography is incidentally involved in the action of the story, and but little treated as a matter of interest in itself; while the time required for the events as narrated is reckoned by seasons, or years, or at most by a decade from the date of Marathon, or of Paros, to the return from Sestos.3 If, indeed, the continuous story of the single war, which fills the main bulk of the last three Books, be taken, as it fairly may be taken, for the real back-bone of this section of the whole work, the time-condition for the connected story and subject is fully supplied by two or three years of our notation, to wit, from the mustering of the forces in the year 481 to the capture of Sestos in the early spring of 478 B.C. The general character of the narrative corresponds to these simpler and more easily fulfilled conditions. narrative, which is continuous and comparatively free from digressions, is historical, that is, truthful in character, and the history is to the author recent history. Criticism has indeed shown that the traditions of the great Invasion as preserved by Herodotus have not escaped transfiguration by the mytho-poetic faculty: 1 fiction is largely blended with fact; interests, humours, fancies, pieties, a dozen various powers have contributed to the record, and the result is far from being the truth exacted by the historical standards of to-day. Still, for the actual history of the war with Xerxes, and much connected therewith, the last three Books of Herodotus remain to us a primary and invaluable authority, a golden treasury But the case stands very differently with the of evidences. histories contained and offered by the first three Books. almost every material point of view the first volume of the work affords truly marvellous contrasts to the last volume. general propositions are here indeed, as usually, misleading. proper justice to the matter many distinctions must be introduced. The historical value of the matter found in Herodotus' work varies not merely from volume to volume, or from Book to Book, but from paragraph to paragraph, from sentence to sentence, from line to line. Every separate story, every individual statement is to be tried on its own merits. Distinctions must be drawn between matters of fact of which Herodotus is the unconscious witness, and the information which he explicitly and professedly bequeaths to posterity: between matters of which he had, or might have had, the express evidence of his senses, or the testimony of good witnesses, and matters which were of remoter evidence or origin: between traditions derived from good Hellenic or foreign sources, and traditions in which interests of one kind or another are latent or patent. Tried by careful and discriminative methods a great deal, even in the first three Books of Herodotus, remains of almost infinite value for the modern historian-independently of the secondary value, as literature, in itself illustrative and evidential, which even the most harsh or the most careless criticism allows that part of the work.

der Perserkriege, Munich, 1876, were 'epoch-making' in this respect.

the marvellous second Book the extremes of value meet. There are matters of fact of almost every shade of meaning to be found in it. Evidences in regard to the mind and character, the adventures and life of the historian himself: evidences in regard to the state of knowledge and ignorance in the cultivated society of his time: evidences in regard to the physical facts in the writer's own present: traditions of widely varying value in regard to the past, from the comparatively accurate record of the last native dynasty in Egypt, to the grotesque and laughable substitutes for history connected with the memory of 'Rhamsinitos' and the Pharaohs of the three empires. What is true of the second Book is true, mutatis mutandis, of the first and of the third Books also. Still, when due allowance is made for the special merits of each particular case, for the fictitious elements in the last three Books and the historical elements in the first three Books, a broad general difference in regard to the respective character of these two primary sections in the work as a whole cannot be denied or much diminished. In historic character and truth, in chronological conditions, in the geographical elements implied or explicitly introduced, in the subject matter and connexion or argument underlying the details, there is a sharp and a far-reaching difference between the first and the third volumes, or major sections, of the work. The first three Books do not form so much a single continuous story, as a mass of stories concerning nations and generations of men, sometimes but very indirectly related to one another. The second Book introduces, indeed, a colossal excursus, almost like a separate and substantive work, upon Egypt and the Egyptians. This Book is sometimes regarded as unduly breaking the unity and cohesion of the whole story told by Herodotus: but from the present point of view the matter contained in it, or something equivalent, is absolutely necessary in order to preserve the balance and harmony of the work in its three-fold division, and further to point completely the contrast between the first and the third volumes. excursus or digression would be no digression, if it did not interrupt an otherwise continuous argument; and a unity, both material and literary, does undoubtedly pervade the heterogeneous elements, out of which the first three Books are composed, especially when the second Book is temporarily withdrawn; but a first perusal leaves many students too much bewildered and overcome by the masses of details to detect the unities of interest and of action. The subject is not a single short war for freedom, issuing in the secured liberty of Hellas, but a secular struggle, or series of struggles for empire, issuing in the triumph of Persia, and the unification of the civilised world, outside Hellas proper, in the hands of the Persian king. This story, however, is so buried under the mass of digressions and excursus, larger or smaller, of one kind and another, that the reader is sometimes at a loss to decide whether the Father of History is himself conscious of the art which conducts the stately yet multifarious pageant of the nations through his pages. The scenes for this great argument are not, for the most part, laid in Greece proper, nor in Greek territory. Such episodes as are located in Sparta, or Athens, or Samos or Corinth mark digressions from the principal narrative: the interest, the point of view are, on the whole, non-Hellenic, within a civilised but a 'barbarian' world. The history is the history of Lydia, of Media, of Persia, of Egypt, above all of Persia; Sardes and Echatana, Babylon and Memphis, and, above all, Susa are the centres of interest; the Greek history which enters, as synchronous or ancillary to the main story, is made, so to speak, a function of the non-Hellenic history. Not but what every considerable passage, almost every detail, is thoroughly hellenised in tone, colour, ethos and sentiment; but it is not the history of Hellas that is in the main narrated: it is an Hellenic version, or number of versions, of non-Hellenic history. From the nature of the case the chronological conditions are large and indefinite; an immense retrospect, a number of vast chronological parallels are driven back into the past. The authentic history is carried a century, two centuries back before the writer's time: up to the age of Kroisos and of Peisistratos, of Anaxandrides and Ariston in Sparta, up to the age of Gyges in Lydia, Deiokes in Media, Psammetichos in Egypt.² Behind these epochs looms a vast antiquity in Egypt, in Asia, not to say in Greece itself. It is small wonder if these partiallyapprehended parallels, this dim and vast perspective, grow more dubious and questionable as they recede, and if the systematic order into which they are worked by the historian's art, is rather literary than scientific. The historical here is less historic, persons are more doubtful, actions are less politic, morality and mythology have made more free with tradition. In all these

and some other respects the contrast between the first three Books and the last three Books can hardly be exaggerated. There is, indeed, one material point of community in the observation that the main theme of the first volume is the rise of Persia, and the main theme of the last volume is the failure of Persia; but the themes are handled on widely different scales, from points of view almost opposed to one another, and with results correspondingly different. This is not the place to pursue the analysis of the first and last divisions of the work of Herodotus into further detail. But, in short, viewing the six Books (1, 2, 3, 7, 8, 9) as two separate groups we see that, if now they stood alone, it would be difficult to understand how they came to be members of one literary whole, so different are the chronological and geographical conditions, in the two groups respectively, so sharp the contrasts between their historic qualities and materials. In the first three Books Greek history is so to speak an accident, the non-Hellenic, the barbarian history is the essential factor in the argument: in the last three, the history is the history of the Hellenes, though the barbarians are of necessity present as the opposite of Hellas. In the first three, enormous times and large spaces are demanded for the narrative; the known world is displayed, or traversed by the actors in the story; generations, centuries, even millenniums are taken as timeunits: in the three last Books, the shores of the Aegean, the lakelike Mediterranean waters, the notorious passes, bays and islands of Hellas are enough for the action of the story. In the first three, the pageant of barbaric civilisations is unfolded in the splendour and magnitude of its works of peace, its deeds of war: in the last three Books, the narrative concentrates upon the course and issue of a single war, a war great and significant, but brief and recent. In the last three Books we have a fairly historic tradition, or treasury of traditions amalgamated, 'contagminated,' or left in the raw state, but always fairly manageable and responsive to criticism: in the first three Books is contained a bewildering mass of traditions, legends, myths, memories, imaginations, theories, hypotheses, in which to separate the credible from the incredible, the serviceable from the unhistoric, the fictitious from the true, is a veritable labour of Psyche, only to be accomplished by the co-operation of a multitude of specialists, many of whom owe little or no allegiance to Hellenic studies.

§ 5. Such are the leading aspects of the patent contrast between the first and the last volumes of Herodotus; a contrast so extreme as to leave us doubtful whether the volumes could be essential parts of one literary whole. The connecting links between the two extreme members of the one great work, though not perhaps the complete clue to their incorporation in one and the same work, are supplied by the intervening group of three Books, numbered 4, 5, 6, and named, without any obvious or special appropriateness, Melpomene, Terpsichore, and Erato; with which, collectively and severally, this present edition is concerned. The characteristics and details of these three Books must, of course, be here pursued and noted throughout with all practicable minuteness. But for the immediate purpose of the present argument it will be sufficient to emphasise the salient characteristics of this triad, or group of three Books, in comparison and contrast with the preceding group, 1, 2, 3, and the succeeding group 7, 8, 9, in order to establish the relative importance of the middle group in the general scheme of the work.

§ 6. So little have students in general, or even apparently expert editors, been accustomed to regard the fourth, fifth and sixth Books of Herodotus, sub specie unitatis, as forming a unity in themselves,1 that it will here not be labour wasted to revive the argument for so regarding them. The argument is a double one: it rests, first, upon the break between the third and fourth Books, and between the sixth and seventh; it rests, secondly, upon the positive continuity and absence of material break between the fourth and fifth Books, and between the fifth and sixth. The three Books are thus detached from their predecessors, and distinct from the sequel, while in themselves, despite important digressions and asides, they are bound and fused into one by a clear and continuous unity of action and of narrative. This point is universally recognised in regard to the fifth and sixth Books, the story of the Ionian revolt being obviously told partly in the end of the with Book and partly in the beginning of the sixth. The undoubted has frequently been treated as sui generis, as by Kenrick (1841), Wiedemann (1890), and A. Lang, in his edition (1888) of the English translation of B. R. (1584). A sound instinct led Kenrick to include Bk. 3, 1-07 in his volume.

The Tauchnitz edition, 1853, cur. F. Falm, presented the text of Herodotus in three volumes; and the third and tearth volumes of Rawlinson's translation contain, respectively, the two last triads of Books. Prof. Sayes segregated the first triad (1883). The second Book pause created by the story of the end of Aristagoras, while affording a legitimate excuse for the division between Book and Book, is obviously not so great as to dissolve the continuity of the main narrative. The break between the fifth and sixth Books is, indeed, far less abrupt, structurally or argumentatively, than breaks occurring inside the fifth and sixth Books themselves respectively; as, for example, the breaks occasioned by the digressions on Athenian and Spartan affairs, which override the chronological conditions of the direct narrative in a highly disturbing fashion. The unity or continuity of the fifth and sixth Books is, in fact, easily and universally conceded, and even exaggerated; for the point more generally overlooked is the continuity, the solidarity, so to speak, between the fourth Book and its successor.

§ 7. At first sight, indeed, the fourth Book may seem insulated in the work of Herodotus, and endowed with a physiognomy as distinctive and peculiar as that which belongs to the second Book. The fourth Book is undoubtedly, from some points of view, marked with a character of its own: but this character is but the exaggeration or apotheosis of elements present in several of the other Books, and among them the fifth. 1. The fourth Book is the Book anthropological per excellence. The ethnography and ethnology of the uncivilised barbarians contained in the Scythian and Libyan Logi³ would in themselves be enough to constitute Herodotus one of the fathers of anthropology, as now-a-days understood. But these passages are not the only passages of the kind in Herodotus. Not to dwell upon the ethnography furnished under the form of armylists in Bks. 7-9,4 there are in the first three Books a number of passages 5 similar in kind though smaller in bulk as compared with the ethnography of Scythia, and of Libya, presented in Bk. 4. But the special ethnographical text is, so to speak, incomplete in Bk. 4; its natural context and complement is to be found in Bk. 5. The fact that the ethnography of Thrace and the Thracians is begun in Bk. 4 (cc. 93-96) and continued in Bk. 5 (cc. 3-8) serves to emphasise the connexion between the two Books. 2. A similar remark applies to a second point on which one of the main characteristics of the fourth Book depends. None of the other Books, as they stand, is so elaborately geographical as the fourth Book. Not merely are the geography of Scythia and the geography of Libva introduced more or less under cover of the narrative, or subjects proper to the Book: excuse is found for a display of the author's conception of the whole earth, inhabited and uninhabited, with its divisions natural or artificial, albeit to complete the outline, or picture, of the area terrarum Herodoto nota, recourse must be had to the account of the Ends of the Earth in Bk. 3,1 while the details intervening can only be filled in by observation of the whole work passim. To such observation the fifth Book offers some notable materials direct and indirect,2 and although it would hardly be possible to found on these correspondences a strong plea for the continuity of Bks. 4 and 5, yet it is fair to see in the passage on the parts beyond the Istros (cc. 9, 10) a designed appendix to the geography of Scythia and its neighbourhood given in Bk. 4, and to suggest some relation between the pinax exhibited by Aristagoras at Sparta as recorded in Bk. 5 with the maps of the earth, according to the Ionians, over which Herodotus makes merry in Bk. 4.3

§ S. But it is not on the solidarity of the anthropology, ethnography, and geography in Bks. 4 and 5 that the main inner argument for the unity of the 'Books' rests, but upon the obvious or easily ascertainable continuity of the main narrative, whether viewed chronologically or viewed as a series of related actions. Apart from episodes and digressions, in which the author places himself more or less arbitrarily at various dates above and below the period proper, so to speak, to the standpoint of these three Books, the events recorded may be said to extend from the capture of Babylon about 518 B.C., or the invasion of Europe in 512 B.C., to the battle of Marathon in 490 B.C., or the failure of Miltiades at Paros in 489 B.C., and his trial, condemnation and death subsequently. A lower or later date as a terminus ad quem cannot be brought into the direct narrative, for the seventh Book takes the battle of Marathon as its chronological point of departure.1 Thus references to later events, though intrinsically valuable, and also important as factors in determining the date of composition and other problems, are not included in the present argument. The year 490 or 489 B.C. is, therefore, the chronological finale for the middle volume, so to speak, of Herodotus, just as the year 480 or 479 B.C. is the end of the third. It may with more reason be sought to push the chronological start for the narrative behind the date of the invasion of Europe, or of the capture of Babylon. Some of the excursus, or episodes, in the Books under review carry the broken chronological perspective into a dim and distant antiquity; but it can hardly be contended that these passages should constitute the chronological framework of the whole, nor do they affect the argument immediately. For such passages are evenly distributed over all the three Books here grouped together, and indeed over the two other groups or triads likewise. More pertinent to the matter in hand are the passages which, though digressions from the point of view of the mere literary structure of the Book or Books in question, are essentially proper or ancillary to the general stream of the continuous narrative. Thus, although it cannot be disputed that a capture of Babylon, or an invasion of Europe by Dareios in person, be the express or structural terminus a quo for the period treated in these Books, vet the digressions on matters essential to the main story, and virtually contemporaneous, carry the date some years higher up. From the death of Hipparchos in 414 B.C. at least the fuller stream of narrative flows fairly continuous.3 If the conventional date for the alliance with Plataea could be maintained, the point of departure might be pushed back to 519 B.C., but that convention is no longer maintainable.4 That date involved a chronological overlapping between the third and the fourth (fifth and sixth) Books; nor is that overlap in any wise removed by the revision of the date of the Atheno-Plataean alliance; for the story of the accession of Kleomenes is related in Bk. 5, and carries back in any case to 519 s.c. or thereabouts, and Kleomenes is already king in

Sparta at the coming of Maiandrios, as related in Bk. 3.1 it might be fairly argued that, while the explicit chronology of the direct narrative in these Books starts with the invasion of Europe by Dareios (variously dated from 508 B.C. up to 516 B.C.2), the implicit chronology of the continuous narrative is by an afterthought, or by a retrospect essentially organic in the direct narrative, carried back to 519 B.C., the three Books thus covering some thirty years. There is nothing foreign in such a device to Herodotus' methods of historiography; quite the reverse. strictly parallel to the method exemplified in the first Book, where the age of Kroisos and of Peisistratos is taken as the express starting-point, only to be superseded by retrospects which carry back the Lydian record to Gyges, and the Medo-Persian to Deiokes the contemporaries of Psamatik, a century before Kroisos. But a hitch, or rather a lacuna, occurs in the traditions preserved by Herodotus, between the final usurpation of Peisistratos and the murder of Hipparchos. Several decades of Athenian tradition are all but lost to Herodotus, and the years from 529 to 519 B.C., and again from 519 to 514 B.C., are sparsely represented by such fragments as those on the fortunes and misfortunes of the Philaidae (6. 34-39, 103), or the expulsion of the Alkmaionidae (5.62). It is, indeed, the sixth Book, not the fifth or the fourth, that supplies the links between the Athenian traditions in the first Book concerning the age of Peisistratos, and the traditions in the fifth Book which concern the expulsion of the Peisistratidae. The digression in Bk. 5 on Spartan affairs seems to refer expressly back to the digression on Sparta in Bk. 1.8 irrespective of the notes on Spartan history that occur in the intervening text.4 But the case is different with the greater digressions on Athens and Athenian history, in Bk. 5; they are not expressly referred back to the digression in Bk. 1, and it is but an accident, to all appearance, that Bk. 6 supplies, to some extent, the missing links. Had due weight been always allowed to this observation, it would not have been the fashion to present the two digressions on Sparta and on Athens, in Bk. 1 and in Bk. 5, as respectively continuous, and forming exact parallels. The treatment of Sparta and the treatment of Athens in the two cases are not strictly co-ordinate. The Spartan traditions are ostensibly taken up in Bk. 5 where they had been dropped in Bk. 1; may, they are made to overlap and cohere the more by the retrospective account of the marriages of Anaxandridas 1 and the fortunes of his sons. The Athenian traditions are not taken up in Bk. 5 where they were dropped in Bk. 1. There is a gap, partially filled in less by the story of the Alkmaionidae in Bk. 5 than by the stories of the Philaidae in Bk. 6. The imperfect observation of these peculiarities in the structure of the fifth and sixth Books may in part be accountable for the calitorial practice of treating these two Books, divorced from the fourth, as something of an isolated unity in the work of Herodotus, and of dividing the whole work for practical purposes into two volumes instead of into three.

§ 9. In one respect, indeed, there is a conspicuous breach in the unity of the actions comprised in the chronological period (519-489 B.C.) determined for these Books. This breach has likewise contributed to detach the fourth Book from its immediate successors, and to disturb the natural divisions of the whole work. The Libyan Logi obliterate, to some extent and at first sight, the continuity of Bks. 4 and 5; not because they contain a large amount of digressional matter in the form of ancient history, or contemporary ethnography, but because they introduce an independent and separate series of events, a different action, to all appearance but loosely connected with the main stream of the story, by the feeble accident of a reputed or real synchronism. Thus, the whole of the Libyan Logi (which form about one-third of the fourth Book) present the appearance of a digression, and the strictly continuous action in the narrative is resumed in Bk. 5, c. 1 from Bk. 4, c. 143—the intervening text being, so to speak, ignored. Even for this structural device there is analogy in the other portions of the work. On a smaller scale the Libyan Logi afford in the second volume a parallel to the Egyptian excursus in the first, which fills the whole of the second Book; while, if it be remembered that in the last volume, and particularly in Bk. 9, Herodotus narrates in succession two series of actions, the operations of the Greek army and the operations of the Greek navy, which are synchronous as hypothesi2; while in Bks. 7 and 8 he treats in similar fashion two series of actions, which were not merely synchronous, but strategically interdependent1: it may be admitted that there is nothing abnormal in his method of presenting synchronous series of events in Bk. 4. The question, therefore, may here be postponed, whether there was in fact any strategic or politic relation between the expedition into Europe and the expedition into Libya, and whether Herodotus is right in his notion that the bournes of the one and of the other were virtually identical, a universal Persian empire. Nor need the question here be raised whether the story of the Libyan expedition is largely and conspicuously prejudiced and pragmatic in itself. Its pragmatic purpose, in the work of Herodotus, the literary intention with which the Libyan Logi are introduced in this place, is what has here been the point of the argument. They are in their nature somewhat of an episode, and a breach of continuity, whatever their historical value may be. But still, judged by the hypothesis of their introduction, and considered in the light of analogies suggested by the structure of the first volume and of the last volume, they are far from justifying the practice, or the view, which isolates the fourth Book from the fifth and sixth Books, ignores the essential continuity of the narrative throughout, and thus destroys the artistic balance and congruity of the whole work. As will appear subsequently the Libyan Logi have, indeed, a remarkable and special function in the lesser unity of the fourth Book taken by itself; but although the fourth Book gains here a strong characteristic, its organic relation to the fifth Book is not thereby destroyed; and though the analogy above suggested, between the second Book or Egyptian Logi and the Libvan Logi in the fourth Book, is capable of further elaboration, and may be in part a result of some community in the origines for Egypt and for Libya, the Libyan Logi are less of a breach, both in bulk and in character, in the unity and contimuity of Bks. 4, 5, 6, than the second Book is in the unity of Bks. 1, 2, 3. However the matter be looked at, the perception will probably deepen and grow that the three middle Books, if not so conspicuously and transparently a whole within the whole as Bks. 7, 8, 9, are yet more of such a minor whole than the first three Books, the unity of which, from the author's point of view, can hardly be gainsaid; nor is this unity and continuity

invalidated either by the recognition of the distinct and individual structure of each of the three Books in question here (as likewise of the six here passed over), or by the discovery of the multitude of subordinate members, or tributaries, which go to make up each of the numerous acts, or series of acts, descriptions or narratives, which have been incorporated by the author in this volume of his text.

$ 10. To display in detail the individual structure of the fourth, fifth and sixth Books, and to emphasise the remarkably diverse and heterogeneous elements, or materials, of which this volume of the text is composed, or conglomerated, is the function of a subsequent analysis. The unity of structure which underlies and pervades the extraordinarily complex material of these Books having been provisionally indicated, it will be next in order to characterise this second volume, or section, of the whole work in comparison with the other two, already described in general terms. For this purpose the four canons or tests, previously employed, the conditions, namely, of place, time, subject, and truth may be re-applied. In other words, we are to consider the geographical and chronological framework, or antecedents of the story, or stories, involved; the national or political interests and points of view implied in the narrative, and its general character or quality as history, or true story. In regard to these canons, speaking generally, the character of the fourth, fifth and sixth Books, viewed as a whole, is ambiguous, and not so clearly defined as the characters of either of the other two groups of Books. The middle Books are in fact intermediate and transitional in character. They present a dissolving view, or a series, nay, a large amphitheatre, of dissolving views. They partake of the characteristics of each of the extreme groups, and in a manner combine them. The 'barbarian' interest in the middle Books is more extreme than in the first three Books, for the second triad deals largely with the outer and utter barbarians; yet the Hellenic interest is more special and intense than in the more exclusively Hellenic Books (7-9), for the second triad deals largely with the inner history of the Greek states, and their relations to one another, irrespective of the non-Hellenic interests. Here too, still speaking generally, the fourth Book may seem to lean towards the 'barbarian' interest in Bks. 1, 2, 3. The main story is still told, as it were, from the nonHellenic standpoint, and nominally, to a large extent, from non-Hellenic sources; while the sixth Book, containing, as it does, the record of Marathon, may seem to lean towards the latter Books, which pile the fuller records of Thermopylae, Salamis and Plataea upon the scantier story of the first Athenian achievement. Meanwhile, the fifth Book, the centre of this group, and of the whole work, focusses the Hellenic interest twice over: first in the anti-medism of the story of the Ionian Revolt, and, secondly, in the positive and centripetal tendency of its great passages of pure Spartan and Athenian history.

§ 11. Apart from these passages the Books may be said to carry on the story of the advance of the Persian power; its approximation to the great centres of Hellenism; its absorption of Hellenic colonies; its gains at the expense of barbarous Europe; its reconquest of rebel Ionia; its spread over the Aegean; its assault on Attica.

The geographical conditions presupposed in this theme are remarkable as compared with those presented in the preceding Speaking generally, the scene is transferred from non-Hellenic to Hellenic soil, and in the fifth and sixth Books the geographical assumptions are similar to those in Bks. 7, 8, 9, especially Bks. 8, 9. The actions are laid in familiar regions, the description of which the story-teller may, for the most part, take for granted. With Bk. 4 the case stands differently; here, indeed, as above recognised, we have geography in excelsis, but the fact has been sufficiently discounted, and must not be allowed to destroy the hardly-won recognition of the continuity of the fourth and fifth Books, but should rather be employed to emphasise the special character of this volume, into which, apparently, the author has thrown many a thing for which he found no lodging elsewhere. The geographical overweight is, in fact, but a further evidence of the composite character, the transitional purpose, of this part of the finished work. That character is not less conspicuous when the chronological scale of the narrative is considered. this, his middle passage, the historian is out of the dim illimitable vistas and labyrinths of Egyptian, Assyrian, Babylonian, Lydian, Median, Persian history; but the chronological scale is not yet reduced to the narrow and exact proportions which obtain in the last three Books. The continuous and advancing narrative but carries us, as above shown, over a period of thirty years at most;

the retrospects take us, however, much farther back towards the beginnings of things. Not to treat the literary introduction, on the origin of the Scyths, over seriously, the passages on the Hellenic states present early conditions of Sparta ¹ and of Athens ² to view; something more than a glimpse is given into the colonial diffusion of the Hellenes, into the age of the Tyrants: the ever-growing communion and union of Hellenie stocks and states are shadowed forth through the centuries. Still, even in these matters it is at most with generations, or with centuries, that the narrator deals, in contrast with the millenial conditions of the historic perspectives in the first three Books, and in distinction from the brief and all but contemporary vision of events presented in the three last Books.

The very interest in barbarian states and tribes, including the uncivilised, implies the growing consciousness of a common Hellenism. Excommunications (5. 67, 72, 88; 6. 38) are less to the point in this connexion than the growth of 'great friendships,' as between Kyrene and Thera (4. 152), Chalkis and Samos, Eretria and Miletos (5. 99), Miletos and Sybaris (6. 21), etc. In estimating such passages it is important to consider how far the highly stimulated patriotism of the Persian wars may have reacted on the records of the earlier period (cp. § 17 infra); but even after all due allowance has been made, there remains a substantial contrast between the tone and effect of the last three Books and the three middle Books in the work of Herodotus; the later achievement and spirit have not by any means wholly destroyed the perspective of a developing Hellenism.

Concerning the historic quality, credibility, or truth, of the matters in these Books it is harder to frame any general proposition that can be of use. The truth (as distinct from the honesty) of the Histories of Herodotus cannot be adequately measured from volume to volume, nor even from Book to Book: every story, every sentence must be separately weighed. with this caveat entered, and looking at the question in the broadest way, it may fairly be expected that the three middle Books will hardly be found to report the objective series of events in a manner so full, coherent, credible and authoritative as that of the last three Books; while, on the other hand, it may be expected that the historic truth will be found less involved in myth, legend, fiction and error than in Bks. 1, 2, 3, than this admission cannot be extorted from a critical observer, nor will such an one ever relax his vigilance over any page of this author without disaster, for there is no page on which fact and fiction-if so crude a distinction may be admitted for the sake of argument—are not to be found lying side by side, or indissolubly interpenetrated, mutually affected, not as oil and vinegar, but as water and wine. And, when the fourth, fifth and sixth Books of Herodotus are critically studied, they are found to contain facts solid and objective as those preserved in any other Books, or passages, of the work (or in any other work), and fictions romantic, droll, purposeful and pragmatic, as comedies of Aristophanes, fables of Aesop, orations of Perikles, or oracles of Bakis.4

§ 12. The argument as given so far is sufficient to show that in truth the main narrative in the three Books here under discussion is a continuous and united whole, if less obviously, yet hardly less essentially, than the continuous narrative in Bks. 1, 2, 3 (or rather Bks. 1 and 3) on the one hand, or Bks. 7, 8, 9 on the other. This chronological unity must be conceded in regard to the simple and obvious story, which may be said briefly to comprise the invasions of Europe, the Ionian revolt, the Marathonian campaign. Considerations above urged tend to show that, even if the narrative be complicated by the introduction of digressions and retrospects on Spartan and Athenian affairs, the main stream hardly recurs to a point before that marked by the opening of Bk. 4, and in so far as earlier dates are reached (in relation to the main stream of events), they are not reached at the expense of Herodotus' ordinary methods of composition, or in such a way as to take the fifth Book, or the fifth and sixth Books, out of organic relation to the fourth. If, on the one hand, the advance of the Persian power be conceived as the main subject of the continuous narrative in these Books, it is abundantly clear that the organic connexion between the fourth and fifth Books is as close and strong as that between the fifth and sixth. If, on the other hand, the parallel or synchronous evolution of affairs in the Greek states, in particular Sparta and Athens, be conceived as only second in importance from the structural point of view, it must still be conceded that no sufficient case can be made out for detaching the fifth and sixth Books from the fourth; on the contrary, to do so is to exhibit and propagate a wholly inadequate understanding of the literary structure of the work of Herodotus, and to destroy the elaborate and classical harmony of its parts. Moreover, it is observable that the main stream and structure of the narrative in the fourth Book sets towards the coming two Books, and breaks with the preceding. The story of the expedition of Dareios into Scythia is told less as an adjunct or sequel to the history of the first vears of his reign in Bk. 3, than as the first stage in the great movement which culminates thrice: first, in the Scythian expedition, again in the Ionian revolt, its suppression and sequel, and again in the Marathonian campaign.1

After this summary of the argument in favour of the unity and detachment, within the work of Herodotus, of the fourth, fifth and sixth Books, taken together, it is next in order to present the results of analysis applied to the Books individually; such a process being essential to any critical discovery of the sources, composition and credibility of the many and various materials brought together, and more or less completely fused into an artistic whole, by the genius of this prince of old Ionian researchers, greatest of the Logographers. The exercise is, of course, confined to the volume here reprinted. The Analyses, which follow, aim at representing the materials collected in these Books from several points of view. The literary structure of each Book is exhibited in such a way as to bear witness at once to the skill of the author in composing his work, and to the appreciative intelligence of the scholar, who marked the three existing divisions. Passages, which contain the record of events for the period proper to the chronological scheme of these Books (519-489 B.C.), are re-grouped, within the table for each Book, in sequences which exhibit the author's contribution to the history of those three decades. Passages, which from the point of view of that chronology are digressions and out of the scheme, are brought into juxtaposition under pro-Special emphasis is laid upon the detachment visional titles. of passages primarily geographical, or ethnographical, as also of passages which present legendary, mythical, or otherwise unhistorical materials. It has not been considered necessary to reprint in immediate sequence, and without regard to the division of the Books, these various groups of sub-divisions and references: any one who uses these tables of contents will be able, without much trouble, to recompose their elements or items so as to obtain from them the contexts in which the main narrative is presented, and likewise those in which digressions of various kinds are to be To pursue the classification of the traditions, preserved by Herodotus, into still further ramifications, without regard to evidence from other sources, whether literary or monumental, would be to foster exaggerated ideas respecting the exclusive authority of the Herodotean work. The primary purpose of these Analyses is fulfilled, if they serve to elucidate the problems of the sources and composition of this portion of the text. But one class of notices or memoranda, those concerned with events and objects later than the fall of Miltiades (489 B.C.), is of such supreme importance for the determination of those very problems, that the analytical tables of contents are to be followed by a special discussion of all that class of memoranda, as found scattered through this triad of Books. The elucidation of these notices leads naturally to a consideration of the part played by afterthought in these records of the past, and the actual historic value, or values, of the various elements displayed by analysis. where in the course of the argument the personal equation of the author, and his relation to the events he records, and the objects he describes, must be approximately stated and discussed. The chief gain from this methodical analysis is, perhaps, realised when we perceive an infinity of values in the work of Herodotus, and a critical absurdity in any single or general proposition regarding the whole, based upon the prevalent character of this or that part, or section of a part. The curve of credibility drawn by the higher criticism of these Histories moves from horizon to zenith; the degree appropriate to each of the author's stories, or statements, is a distinct and individual problem.

§ 13. The fourth Book falls clearly, like the first, second, ninth, and perhaps the seventh, into two main parts, the division being not merely involved in the difference of subject matter, but clearly and formally marked by the author himself. part comprises cc. 1-144, and may be denominated, for the sake of brevity, the Scythian Logi: the second comprises the remainder of the Book, cc. 145-205, and is apparently by Herodotus himself named the Libyan Logi. Two or three considerations may have prohibited the erection of these two parts into separate 'Books': (1) The second part is hardly of sufficient bulk to form a separate Book, yet from the nature of the subject matter defies incorporation with the next succeeding passages, which now form the beginning of Bk. 5. (2) The second ex hypothesi contains a record of events synchronous with the main course of events recorded in the first part. (3) A curiously exact parallelism, more pronounced than in any other of the Herodotean Books, may have been detected underlying the literary structure of the two parts. For, without much violence, each of the two main parts falls into three sub-divisions or elements: I. An historical, or legendary, retrospect or introduction (προδιήγησις).² II. An excursus, or series of digressions on lands and peoples in question, in other words, a geographical and ethnographical element. direct historical narratives, in the one case, of the invasion of Europe, in the other, of the invasion of Libya, ex hypothesi synchronous, even if independent. The following Analysis employs these observations:-

The preceding Analysis is enough to show the extreme artificiality patent in the composition of the fourth Book. This artificiality could not be disguised by divorcing the two strictly parallel structures now combined under one number. It may be taken to support the hypothesis that these parts of the work, and the whole volume or section into which they are incorporated, were designed as a connecting link between the extreme members of the larger trinity, into which the whole work of Herodotus, as above shown, naturally divides. The indications of place, and to some extent those of time, to be collected subsequently from this Book (see § 16 infra), tend to show that the author was in contact with western sources before this Book assumed its present The Analysis itself suggests a considerable number and diversity in the sources here laid under contribution. indeed, on the face of things unlikely that matters so disparate as the histories and geographies here presented side by side had previously been brought into juxtaposition or intimacy. story of the Scythian expedition is one thing; the geography and ethnography of Scythia another. The description of Libya is out of all proportion to the story of the Persian mission to recover Barke. It may be doubted whether the stories of the early colonial adventurers, and the early history of the Greeks in Libya, stood in any connexion with the story of the Persian mission, until Herodotus put those as a preface to this. It is possible that the expedition against the Scyths and the expedition into Libya may have been mentioned together in a Greek source before Herodotus; it is probable that the geography of Scythia and the geography of Libya had been described in more than one work previously. But the literary scheme and rationale of the Scythian and Libyan Logi, together with an infinity of details, are almost certainly due to the idiosyncrasy of Herodotus. For the further evaluation of the contents of this extraordinary Book the reader is referred to the concluding sections of this Introduction, to the notes on the text, and to the appendices, in which the problems immediately connected with it are discussed.

§ 14. The main lines of literary structure in the fifth Book are less clear than those in the fourth, and are certainly not laid down on the same highly-artificial plan. From one point of view the Book is divided between a narrative of events which carries on the general course of the Herodotean argument from the point reached in the fourth Book, and a narrative, or set of narratives, recounting the history of the leading Greek states, speaking roughly, in the period covered by the Persian history in the third and fourth Books, and a part of the fifth. If these two elements in the fifth Book be separately envisaged, the matter may be distributed as follows, neglecting for the immediate purpose some other major and minor digressions:—

A. The connected chronological narrative of the continued advance of the arms and power of Persia, until checked by the Ionian revolt, together with an account of the origin and early course of this reactionary movement (cc. 1-38, 49-51, 97-126).

B. A dual excursus, inserted into the main structure of the narrative, and breaking it up, as just above shown, into three stages: the first digression (cc. 39-48) dealing with Sparta, or rather with two Spartan stories (a. the story of the accession of Kleomenes, cc. 39-41; b. the story of the adventures of Dorieus, cc. 42-48); the second digression (cc. 55-96) on a much larger and more complex scale, dealing with Athens, or rather, stringing together a number of stories, the main current of which is an important contribution to the history of Sparta, during the period, broken in turn by a number of digressions within the digression, which demand further analysis. Provisionally, however, and in the first instance the structure of the Book may be exhibited as falling into five divisions, or stages:—

- The advance of the Persians continued, and the immediate cause or occasion of the Ionian revolt, cc. 1-38.
- II. Digression on Spartan affairs, cc. 39-48.
- III. Aristagoras in Sparta, cc. 49-51 (-54).
- IV. Digression on Athenian affairs, cc. 55-96.
 - V. The alliance of Athens with the Ionians, and the conduct of the revolt, down to the flight of Aristagoras, cc. 97-126.

From this tabulated statement it is obvious that the three parts or divisions of the Book numbered I., III., V. make up a record of events ex hypothesi in time successive, in causation more or less closely connected: while parts II. and IV. contain respectively two records of two series of events (neglecting digressions), more or less strictly synchronous with each other, and with the main course of the continuous narrative in the preceding Books. But this five-fold sub-division of the fifth Book is so far from exhibiting adequately the extreme complexity of its structure that it may well be supplemented from a second point of view. There follows, accordingly, an Analysis in which the two main elements in the Book are treated severally, and each sub-divided into the smaller parts or sections which seem naturally to suggest themselves, without any attempt to carry the process of analysis to a point where the wood might become invisible, by reason of the trees.

A. The connected or continuous narrative.

- a. The continued advance of the Persian empire.
 - i. The reduction of Thrace, cc. 1, 2, 12-15.
 - The surrender of Macedon: or, the story of the young men in women's apparel, cc. 17-21.
 - The incorporation of the Propontine states and islands in N. Aegean, cc. 26, 27.

β . The Ionian revolt.

- i. The immediate cause and antecedents.
 - 1. The affair of Naxos, cc. 28-38.
 - 2. Aristagoras in Sparta, cc. 49-51.

With this arrangement may be compared the structure of Bk. 3, as we have it, which consists of five parts, (39-60, 98-117), dividing the narrative.

- 3. Aristagoras in Athens, c. 97.
- 4. The return of the Paionians, c. 98.
- Outbreak and conduct of the Ionian revolt down to the flight of Aristagoras, cc. 99-123.
- iii. The defection and end of Aristagoras, cc. 124-126.
- iv. The intrigues and end of Histiaios, and suppression of the Ionic revolt, 6. 1-32.

It will be observed that the three sections into which the first main division of the continuous narrative is sub-divided are not continuous in the text. They are in fact separated by a number of small digressions, or notes; and in the first of these sub-divisions, dealing with Thrace, the historical narrative is further interrupted in such a way as may be most easily exhibited in the following table:—

- A. a. Continued advance of the Persian empire.
 - i. The reduction of Thrace, cc. 1-27.
 - al. The Perinthians, and others, cc. 1, 2.

b1. Ethnographical excursus, cc. 3-10.

- 1. Thrace and the Thracians, cc. 3-8.
- 2. Country beyond Istros, cc. 9-10.
- a². The sea-coast (N. of Aegean), c. 10.

(τὰ παραθαλάσσια, e. 10 ad f.)

- b². Digression on Dareios at Sardes, cc. 11-13.
 - 1. The tyrants' rewards, c. 11.
 - 2. Story of the Paionian belle, cc. 12, 13.
 - [3. The mission of the spies, 3. 135-138.]1
- a⁸. Paioni, cc. 14, 15.
 - b3. Digression on the Lake-dwellings, c. 16.
- The surrender of Macedon, and the story of the young men in women's apparel, cc. 17-21.

Excursus, or notes, on

- 1. The Hellenic descent of the kings of Macedon, c. 22.
- Dareios at Sardes, cc. 23-25 (anecdotes of Megabazos, c. 23, Otanes, c. 25).
- Incorporation of the Propontine states, etc., by Otanes, son of Pharaspes, cc. 26-27.

Passing on to the second division of the continuous narrative (3. the Ionian revolt), a pause, or fresh start, is obviously marked

The story of Demokedes, 3. 129-138, may, as Duncker (Hist. of Antiquity, E. T. vol. vi. p. 270 n.) suggests, belong chronologically to this place, and might have come in here, or below, cc. 23-25.

It might, however, pace Duncker, be placed at Dareios' first coming to Sardes: the king gets him rather too easily from Susa to the Bosporos, 4. 85.

by the author himself at the opening of c. 28, μετὰ δὲ κτλ. The short aside on the previous history of Miletos (c. 29), which immediately follows, is treated in the Analyses above as a quantité negligeable; but it might be marked as a digression, and the main narrative resumed in c. 30. The story of Naxos and the immediate results of the failure there is told continuously (cc. 30-38), and the next two stages in the continuous narrative (Aristagoras in Sparta, cc. 49-51; Aristagoras in Athens, c. 97) are separated as clearly as possible from what precedes, and from each other, by the two notable digressions on Sparta (cc. 39-48), and on Athens (cc. 55-96), to be further considered below. At first sight the division and titulature of the remainder of the Book, and of the continuous story of the Ionian revolt, from the appearance of Aristagoras in Athens down to his defection and death, might be left unbroken; but the subdivisions, above given, seem so strongly marked in the literary structure of the Book, that, quite apart from their practical convenience, they can hardly be ignored. What is here exhibited is, indeed, not more but less than may be deemed essential. A fuller analysis is desirable from two points of view. It is as necessary to a discussion of the actual course of events, as to a discovery of the sources. But these two points being considered elsewhere, the broad titles of the above Analysis may be taken as sufficiently displaying the bare literary anatomy of the direct narrative in The two considerable digressions (B. and II., IV. pp. xxxiii f. supra) on Spartan and on Athenian history, require. however, further analysis in this place. Of the two the first, on Sparta (ce. 39-48), is much the simpler, and is in fact in itself an utterly inadequate sketch of Spartan history during the period ac hypothesi under review. In consequence it fails to supply any sufficient reason for the policy of Sparta in the crisis here actually reached by the main narrative. In this respect the excursus compares unfavourably with the greater excursus on Spartan affairs, more than a generation earlier, in Bk. 1. 65 ff. The passage here under review substitutes for the history of the state biographical anecdotes of its kings. This substitution may be in part an homage to the personality of Kleomenes, the greatest figure in Spartan tradition since the era of Lykurgos; but it may also in part be due to the discreet silence in which the Spartans wrapt their political and military actions, at least when those actions were little to their credit. It is fortunate, and in many ways significant, that the shortcomings of this brief sketch of Spartan affairs are, to some extent, made good by Herodotus himself in the context. Some knowledge of Spartan action and policy during the last two decades of the sixth century, previous to the application of Aristagoras in 499 B.C., may be recovered from the second and larger excursus, ostensibly on Athenian affairs, supplemented by other digressional passages in these Books, such as the story of the Argive war, of the Plataean alliance, not to speak of the earlier application of Maiandrios recorded elsewhere. But all these references are beside the question here immediately considered, viz. the literary anatomy of the fifth Book. From this point of view the express digression on Spartan affairs resolves itself simply into two sections:—

i. The story of the succession of Kleomenes, cc. 39-41.

ii. The story of the adventures of Dorieus, cc. 42-48.

The material or historical aspects of these stories are more fully discussed in the notes and appendices, and need not here be anticipated.

Separated from the anecdotal or biographical traditions, which do duty for Spartan history in this Book, first by a section of the continuous narrative (III. Aristagoras in Sparta, cc. 49-51), and secondly by a geographical appendix (on the king's highway from Sardes to Susa, cc. 52-54), comes the larger and more considerable excursus on Athenian affairs (cc. 55-96), which is in itself compacted of various elements, direct narrative and digression, covers or illustrates a great variety of subjects, and calls for The direct narrative in this passage consists minute analysis. of a sketch of Athenian history from the year 515/14 B.C. to the year 500/499 B.C., or thereabouts; in other words, from the date of the arrival of Dareios at Sardes, for the 'Scythian' expedition (4.1), to the date of the arrival of Aristagoras at Athens (5, 97). But this sketch is complicated by a number of minor digressions, or inserted notes, to an extent which almost defies clear analysis. Nevertheless, in the following tables the attempt is made to exhibit the structure of this portion of the Book, without prejudice to the problem, how such an admirable disorder may have originated.

IV. Digression on Athenian affairs, cc. 55-96.

i. Main story, or series of stories (515-499 B.C.)

1. The dream and death of Hipparchos ($14 B.C.), cc. 55-56.

2. The expulsion of Hippias (411/410 B.C.), cc. 62-65.

 History of the Athenians from the date of their liberation to the coming of Aristagoras (neglecting digressions), 510-499 B.C., cc. 66-96.

The first and second sections of this main narrative are plainly separated by the digressions on the Gephyreans, and Phoenicians in Boeotia, cc. 57-61. The second and third sections are plainly differentiated by the pause, or title, introduced by the author in the words ούτω μεν κτλ. c. 65 ad fin. So far the analysis is plain sailing. But the third section of the main narrative is traversed and shattered by a variety of sub-sections digressions, asides and what not, constituting an almost desperate chaos of pieces, the pattern of which is well-nigh inextricably confused. At one point, indeed (c. 92), an oracle is needed to decide whether the passage with which we have to deal is an article in the main narrative, or a digression in the form of such an article; while at other points (c. 9; cc. 89, 90; cc. 94, 95) main narrative and digression alternate with bewildering rapidity. We have a very Proteus in hand, but it is necessary to retain a firm hold of this body of dissolving episodes, if the secrets of its composition and origin, credibility and authority, are even to be adequately stated and discussed. With that prospect in view the following table may be submitted, as a fairly sufficient Analysis of the literary structure of the passage here immediately in question.

History of the Athenians from 510-499 B.C., cc. 66-96.
 Main story.
 Digressions.

(1) a. The constitution of Kleisthenes, c. 66.

b. Digression on Kleisthenes of Sikyon, cc. 67, 68.

(2) a. Attempts of Sparta and other states, including Aigina, to overthrow Athens, cc. 69-81.

b. Digression: origin of feud between Athens and Aigina, cc. 82-88.

- (3) a. Project for restoring Hippias, and its failure. His retirement to Sigeion, cc. 89-94.
 - Digression: how Sigeion came into the possession of Hippias,
 cc. 94 f.
- (4) The medism of Hippias, and the quarrel between Athens and the Persians, c. 96.

Even this Analysis of the passage, elaborate as it may appear, insufficiently exhibits the full complexity of the construction. Two sub-divisions in particular require further elucidation, those numbered (2) a and (3) a respectively. Further Analyses are therefore here subjoined.

(2) a. Attempts of Sparta, etc., to overthrow Athens, cc. 69-81.

i. Appeal to Sparta against the democracy; expulsion of the 'accursed' legislator, cc. 69, 70.

Note.—Origin of the curse: the Kylonian ayos, c. 71.

ii. The interference of Kleomenes, and his discomfiture: appeal of Athens to Persia, cc. 72, 73.

iii. The great invasion of Attica by Kleomenes and its collapse, cc. 74-76. Note.—On the Dorian invasions of Attica, c. 76.

iv. Victory of the Athenians over Boeotians and Chalkis. The anathema and epigram, c. 77.

Note.—On the excellence of democracy, c. 78.

v. Alliance of Thebes and Aigina against Athens, and hostilities, cc.

[Excursus. (2) b supra, with Notes 1. On the adoption of Ionic dress in Attica,

2. On certain customs in Argos and Aigina, c. 88.]

(3) a. Projected restoration of Hippias, etc., cc. 89-94.

i. Reprisals of Athens on Aigina, c, 89.

ii. Alarm of Sparta, c. 90.

iii. Congress of allies at Sparta, cc. 91-93.

a. Project of restoring Hippias, c. 91.

- b. Opposition of Corinth, based upon memories of the Tyrants of Corinth, c. 92.
 - a. Story of Kypselos and his salvation.

β. Stories of Periandros.

- 1. The advice of Thrasybulos.
- 2. The ghost of Melissa.
- c. Failure of the project, c. 93.

In regard to the somewhat confused elements which make up the whole section denominated here 3 (a) it is elsewhere argued that cc. 81-89 probably involve some anachronism, and it is obvious that the speech put into the mouth of Sokles (c. 92), which is a colossal ignoratio elenchi and in itself also obviously inconsequent, from a more general point of view must be regarded as a valuable contribution to the conventional legend of the Tyrannis, current in the author's day. On the legitimate inferences to be drawn from the passage, and the context, as to the sources, and the date of composition, or collection of materials, by the historian, it would here be premature to enlarge. But it is difficult for an attentive reader to apply the method of pure literary analysis to the text of Herodotus, in this important excursus, without detecting the presence of many valuable clues and suggestions for the statement of those problems respecting sources and composition, upon the solution of which the historical authority of the work, line by line, in the plain sense of the terms, must largely depend.

§ 15. The literary structure of the sixth Book is almost indescribably complicated. At times the narrative might seem to have little more unity than a batch of anecdotes, the memorial stream of events to break into a shower of spray. The unity of Herodotus' work, as a whole, the inner unity of the second of the three greater sections, or volumes, into which it may best be divided, seem to be here in jeopardy. For something more than a moment or two the unities of action and of interest are all but lost in a maze of cross purposes, a mass of details, a confusion of memoranda. For this result the nature of the historian's subject in the stage here reached is in part responsible. The sixth Book brings him and us, as it were, in due course face to face with the Hellenic aggregate, whose turn to do and suffer at the hands of In the progress of ecumenical history the Persians is come. the moment arrives for the Persian to assault the liberties of Hellas, and this Book records the results of the first encounter. But, in attacking the Greeks, Dareios was not opposing a single and united system, political and military: he was invading a nebulous infinity of autonomous states. This fact, once a source of strength and of weakness to the Greeks, in war and in peace, must ever be a source of difficulty and confusion to historians of Greece. That the Greeks formed not a single sovran state, but a host of independent political communities, made it very difficult for Dareios to conquer them, and for us, as for Herodotus, to relate their fortunes, and misfortunes. in a coherent story. So long as the course of pre-Hellenic antiquity could be depicted as a succession of great monarchies or empires, the last of which, the Persian, gave unity to the civilised Asiatic world, and looked at one time almost capable of comprehending the whole Mediterranean basin in one political scheme, the unity and continuity of the story could be substantially preserved.1 But at the point where, from the nature of the case (or from the nature of the evidences), the system of ancient civilisation resolves itself into a number of co-ordinate states, the unity of action and interest, necessary for successful literary treatment, disappears, until the empire of the Romans for a while restores it. It can of course be replaced in the meanwhile, to a greater or less extent, by various devices, more or less corresponding to the reality of things. For the actual history of the Greek states may be substituted an abstract scheme of typical forms or stages of social and political development, more or less true of each state generally: but that is not history. Or a unity may be imparted to the treatment of Greek history by elevating one or other Greek state into leading or representative prominence, and making a history of the many a function of the history of that There is much, doubtless, in the condition of the literary sources which has encouraged these devices; but scientific history protests against them, as inadequate and misleading in view of the objective order of events, and even in presence of the accumulating evidences, of one kind and another. Or. again. a transcendental unity is communicable to Greek history, when it becomes, for a time, the record of a struggle between a league of Greek states, relatively a Pan-hellenic union, and a single non-Hellenic power. But every such union was partial and brief: partial, for the forces of Hellenism were divided, scattered, preoccupied, and opposed; 2 brief, two or three years, three or four battles exhausting the genuine unity of the action.8 In short, the treatment of Greek history must alternate between a bundle of monographs and a philosophic abstraction; for "only the state has a history," and Hellas was never a state. of Herodotus seized the opportunity afforded by the traditions of the great Armada 4 for the historical treatment of an ecumenical episode, which exhibited the highest instance of Pan-hellenism on record, and lent itself to literary treatment in the common interest, almost as though it had been the achievement of a single state. To have complicated the story of the last invasion by any adequate review of the antecedents and acts of the Greek states severally, might have ruined all unity in the work. His art or a happy accident saved Herodotus from any such blunder. Still less could such a review have found adequate expression in the first volume of his work without destroying the unity proper to the history of the barbarian civilisations, which is certainly the predominant interest of those Books. But in the course of the intervening Books, and particularly in the course of Bk. 6, opportunities arise, nay, a necessity is laid on the historian, of sketching the antecedents and characteristics of the several Greek states opposed to the Persian and attacked by The multiplication of these opportunities, the growth of this necessity, till a sort of climax is reached in the sixth Book, are not hard to explain, on objective grounds, connected with the general scheme of the work, and with the natural or primary sources of the narrative. As the Persian power becomes more and more deeply implicated with Hellas, the Greeks not forming a single state or power, but a number of states and powers, many more or less independent lines of action have to be brought together and focussed, so to speak, on the Greek side, in order that the action may be coherent and memorable. Moreover, this complexity is increased by the relations of the Greek states to each other at the time, or in the immediate past; as well as by the necessity, or at least the opportunity. of introducing matter to illustrate the special character or antecedents of particular city-states. Thus, although as above indicated, a substantial and a chronological continuity underlies the three Books (4, 5, 6), the general stream of Persian history being carried onwards systematically from the invasion of Europe to the battle of Marathon, yet there is an immense increase in the amount of Hellenic matter, in the materials for Greek history, supplied by Herodotus in these three Books, and a strongly-marked change in the tone and character of his narrative and the standpoint from which the tale is told. These characteristics reach their highest intensity in the sixth Book, and render the analysis of this Book specially difficult. The main narrative does, indeed, continue after a fashion, but it is compounded of very disparate elements; it loses almost every pretence or appearance of sustained or intrinsic authority, and becomes now a mere string of unrelated adventures, now a bald chronicle of annalistic jottings; it is buried for a time and encompassed by masses of purely episodic matter, which have little or nothing to say to the Persian and his doings; it emerges at last into fuller view, in the story of the Marathonian campaign, only to disappear again, as if down a katavothra, under a final pile of Athenian anecdotes and self-interested memories. digressional element in this Book is more conspicuous than the element of direct narrative, and stands in a variety of relations There are digressions involved in the direct narrative, or at least fairly introduced as explanatory of the relations of the Greek states to Persia.1 There are digressions, the object of which is to explain the relations of Greek states to each other.2 There are digressions in which the internal affairs of Greek states are treated on their own merits; and there are purely anecdotal items, or at least stories, for the introduction of which it is hard to find any excuse, except the all-sufficient one that they are far too good to be omitted.4 This classification may not be exhaustive, and its members are certainly not rigidly The first two classes of excursus are obviously and exclusive. generally more closely related to the main narrative than the two last classes, but it is not always easy to draw hard and fast lines between them, or to say into which class a particular passage should be inserted; nor is it always easy to draw the line between the main narrative and the excursus in this Book.5 The general effect is to make the literary or structural analysis extremely difficult, and a satisfactory or convincing scheme hardly attainable. It is, however, reasonable to maintain the distinction between the continuous narrative and digressional or excursional matter, as far as possible; although it may have to be admitted that even the consequent or advancing narrative

A. The direct, or continuous narrative in Bk. 6, even if not quite so conspicuously tripartite as in Bk. 5, still falls without much straining into three sub-divisions. The first concludes the story or stories of the Ionian revolt (cc. 1-32); the last contains the story or stories of the Marathonian campaign, or expedition of Datis (cc. 94-120). The structure of each of these two passages is, however, very imperfectly displayed by the bald references just given, and it is desirable to pursue the analysis The process is not, however, plain sailing. In the case of the sixth Book more than in the case of any other single Book in the work of Herodotus, the major sub-divisions, and still more the minor, may have to be drawn with some appearance of free-will, and the results will lie open to contentious alternatives. For example, the first sub-division above given (ec. 1-32, end of the Ionian revolt) is obviously exposed to more than one objection. It may be urged that it includes matter (the adventures of the exiled Dionysios in the west, c. 17; adventures of exiled Samians in the west, ce. 21-25), which hardly belong to the history of the Ionian revolt, and certainly suggest a difference in origin or source. Again, it may be urged that the break or point of sub-division is not correctly placed at the end of e. 32. Chronologically, it might be argued, c. 31 begins a new narrative, and this apparent chronological break coincides likewise with the literary structure of the work, the fate of Histiaios (cc. 26-30) serving as a finale to the story of the revolt, even as the fate of Aristagoras has properly served as a finale to Bk. 5. In regard to the last section of the connected narrative in the Book a similar objection may be taken. It must, indeed, be conceded that the story of the Marathonian campaign flows on in almost unbroken continuity from c. 94 to c. 120, inclusive, the only digression (on the origin of the Plataean alliance, c. 108) being at once short and pointed. But a difficulty arises in regard to the sequel. The story of the Parian expedition (cc. 132-136) may be regarded as carrying the connected and chronologically continuous narrative one stage farther on; if so regarded, it spoils the symmetry of the tripartition above. To deal with these objections in reverse order: the story of the Parian expedition appears in the text of Herodotus not as a section of the general story, but rather as an excursus or a sequel to the story of Marathon. It is not so much the story of an expedition to Paros as the story of the divinely ordained fate of Miltiades. Its object is less historical than ethical. Herodotus himself shows little or no sense of its political or military significance. In short, structurally the story is not a contribution to the chronological and continually advancing narrative which runs through these Books, but one of a number of heterogeneous appendices, tacked on to the story of Marathon, forming a rather complicated finale to the sixth Book, and emphasising all the more effectively the pause or breach between the second and third volumes of the work. observations justify us in maintaining the tripartition of the continuous narrative in the sixth Book, which is accordingly here subsequently observed in the tables.

- vi. The recovery of Chios, Lesbos, Tenedos, and the punishment of the rebels, cc. 31, 32, with a note on the σαγήνη, c. 31.

In regard to the first section of the Book (cc. 1-32) it must be admitted that cc. 17, 22-25, relate matters not immediately proper to the story of the Ionian revolt, whether from a chronological or from a constructive point of view. But on the other hand the matters are so short and slight in themselves, and so directly related to the story, that it is hardly worth while to mark them by distinct numbers in the table, even if so doing we might emphasise their probably foreign origin. The first question here must be as to the conception of the author himself; he plainly regards these passages as parts of the narrative in place, or at the worst as mere parentheses. So much may, indeed, be admitted, even while we refuse to shatter the continuity of the text or story in this section: that these manifest asides, or parentheses, serve to betray the composite character of the narrative of the Ionian revolt as a whole, and help to explain the chronological inconse-

quence, or incompleteness, which is elsewhere the subject of special examination in this volume.1 The last remark has some bearing upon the chief objection to the limits assigned in the literary analysis of this Book to the first part, and the break between Parts I. and II. For where exactly does the story of the Ionic revolt end, and the next part begin? It must be admitted that chronologically the point fixed by c. 32 is unfortunate in On the one hand, as elsewhere demonstrated, a two directions. later point of time is reached in cc. 28-30 than in c. 32. On the other hand, c. 31 opens with a clearly marked principium divisionis in the indication of a date, and this principle is so well maintained in the sequel that it forces itself into our literary analysis of the Book as the constitutive principle for the composition or recognition of the second part of the direct narrative; how, then, can the break between the first and second parts be placed in c. 32 and not in c. 30? Simply because it seems impossible to overlook the structural significance of the sentence which concludes c. 32 and sums up the three conquests of Ionia. It may further be observed that a new point of departure is gained in c. 33 by the change of scene from Ionia to the Helles-At the same time the inconsequence or anomaly in the analysis of the Book here admitted is not without its further value. What is clear in the main narrative of the Book is the story of the Ionic revolt and the story of the Marathonian campaign. What is not so clear is the matter intervening between the two. That matter is partly, indeed, conspicuous digression; but in part it belongs to the continuous or advancing chronicle. So much of it as belongs to the continuous chronicle forms the direct connecting link between the story of the Ionian revolt and the story of Marathon. This link is, however, itself anything but simple or easily determined. Its delimitation must, however, be attempted before the further contents of the connected narrative in this Book can be profitably exhibited in a tabulated form.

The chief characteristic of the portion or portions of the sixth Book, which serve to connect the story of the Ionian revolt with the story of the Marathonian campaign, is that they are presented in strict annalistic form, and with a chronological severity, wholly remote from the method of the antecedent Books, and not fully recovered 1 even in the story of the great invasion, as told in Bks. 7, 8, 9. We seem, in this passage, to have passed from the historical methods of Herodotus to the historical methods of Thucydides. The events are assigned strictly to their proper years. The years are apparently campaigning or war years; and even the distinctions of season are not wholly wanting.² On this wise the annals of three years which separate the suppression of the Ionian revolt from the expedition of Datis and Artaphrenes are systematically given in this Book. In the case of the first two years the method is clear. The annals of the first year (493-2 B.C.) are indeed broken or interrupted by a digression (cc. 34-40, on the Athenian acquisition of the Thracian Chersonese), but the digression is so obvious as not to obscure the chronological sequence, and the acts of the year are given in cc. 31-33, 41, 42. The annals of the second year (492-1 B.C.) are continuously and concisely given in cc. 43-45. The annals of the third year (491-0 B.C.) are in various ways more problematic. Down to a certain point, indeed, they proceed with consistency (cc. 46-51). But then and there the narrative becomes involved and confused with digressional matter, and matter anachronistic, to an almost desperate extent. attempt to re-establish the true sequence of events is made elsewhere *; here it is sufficient to remark that Herodotus places in a confused and tentative fashion previous to Marathon—as is shown clearly by the transition from c. 93 to c. 94—a good many events which must have occurred after that epoch. these provisions and observations the following table may be taken as fairly representing the Analysis of the second part of the connected narrative in the sixth Book.

A. III. The expedition of Datis; stories of Marathon; or chronicles of 490 B.C., cc. 94-120, (-124).

In this passage the narrative as a whole is continuous, and the sub-divisions, which naturally suggest themselves, turn rather on the objective course of events, and upon changes of scene in the action, than upon the character or structure of the narrative itself. From both points of view the record of the actual battle of Marathon (cc. 110-116) stands up as the most important and substantial block of the story or commentary: before and after it the passages are apparently more composite, the structure most disputable. Small digressions occur at three points: (1) a note on the Delian earthquake, c. 98; (2) a longer note, on the antecedents of Miltiades and his Strategia, cc. 103, 104; (3) a very important note on the origin of the Atheno-Plataean alliance, c. 108. If these digressions in the narrative proper were to be taken as determining its structure, the following analysis might serve as sufficient:

- (cc. 94-98, Aἰολέας). Story of the expedition down to the visit to Delos. Note on the unique earthquake, c. 98.
- ii. (cc. 99-103, ην Μιλτιάδης). Story of the expedition down to the meeting at Marathon.

Note on the antecedents, etc., of Miltiades, cc. 103, 104.

- iii. (cc. 105-108, πανδημεί). Preparations for battle. Note on the Plataean alliance, c. 108.
- iv. (cc. 109, 110-116). Decision. The battle.
- v. (cc. 117-124). Sundry notes and addenda.

The above table is, however, far from exhibiting the variety of the matters included in the passage as a whole, and it may be doubted whether in this case the short digressions or notes should be taken as the fixed points even for the literary analysis. It seems well to supplement an imperfect and disputable Analysis by a fuller one, based upon sub-divisions, into which the story naturally falls, when account is taken of the course of action and events as here recorded.

The above Analysis, in some nineteen articles or numbers, exhibits at once the action and the story, as they appear in the pages of Herodotus; and probably may suggest, when traced in the text, directions in which observations must be sought for the elucidation of the problems of source and authority. Even such an Analysis cannot but be somewhat arbitrary and incomplete; and in particular the passage on the actual battle (cc. 110-116), and its immediate sequel, may seem too summarily disposed of. But in the structure of the Book, and of this sub-division of the main narrative, the description of the actual battle emerges in unmistakable contour. Moreover, the problems connected with it and the immediate context are hereafter discussed with no lack of minuteness.

Here, therefore, further discussion of this topic may be postponed; nor can the problem of the authenticity of the text, containing the defence of the Alkmaionids, be raised within the limits of this Introduction.¹

B. It remains to consider, in further detail, the excursus, digressions, asides, notes or similar elements, which remain in the sixth Book, after the three organic sections or stages of the main narrative have been detached. It has, however, already been observed that the elements of direct continuous narrative and of digressional interest are almost inextricably combined in this This contagmination is especially obvious and especially perplexing in two sections or possible sections of the Book, viz., that dealing with the annals of the triennium (say, cc. 31 (33)-93), and that dealing with the sequel to Marathon (say, cc. 121 (125)-140). In the other two sections of the Book, which would exist on this hypothesis, viz., the end of the Ionian revolt (cc. 1-32) and the Marathonian campaign (cc. 94-120), the digressions or notes are comparatively short and easily enumerated. As whatever may be the most acceptable arrangement for the exhibition of the fundamental literary structure of this labyrinthine Book, these two passages must in any case be recognised as substantial items or entities in the Analysis, it may be worth while here to recapitulate the short digressions which they contain.

- · I. The end of the Ionian revolt, cc. 1-32, with short digressions, notes, or parenthetical remarks upon
 - a. The adventures of Dionysios, c. 17.
 - B. The capture of Zankle by the Samians, cc. 23 f.
 - y. The divine warnings to Chios, c. 27.
- III. The Marathon campaign, cc. 94-120, with digressions, etc., upon
 - a. The earthquake of Delos, c. 98.
 - β. The antecedents of Miltiades, cc. 103 f.
 - y. The Athenian cult of Pan, c. 105 ad fin.
 - δ. The Atheno-Plataean alliance, c. 108.
 - €. Losses, etc., c. 117.

But this table leaves two other passages (II. Annals of the Triennium, cc. 33-93; IV. Sequel to Marathon, cc. 118 (121)-140) unanalysed. The second passage, indeed, may seem to offer less difficulty, though it is not easy to decide where exactly it begins, any one of the following chapters 117, 118, 121,

125 being possible points of departure. Taking c. 125 as perhaps the least unsatisfactory, the finale of the Book resolves itself into a series of appendices as follows:—

- 1. Stories of the Alkmaionidae, cc. 125-131.
- 2. The Parian expedition, and the end of Miltiades, cc. 132-136.
- 3. The Athenian occupation of Lemnos, cc. 137-140.

But the long and important section, cc. 33-93, remains and defies analysis, the continuous narrative being represented by cc. 33, 41-(46, 48-)51, 61 ad init., 73, the remainder (cc. 34-40, (47), 52-72, 74-93) being devoted to digressions, in which it is almost impossible to maintain chronological order, and not easy throughout even to distinguish between what is Spartan and what is Athenian history. In regard to the chief passage (cc. 52-93), it is, indeed, clear that it begins by being purely Spartan history, and ends by being Athenian or Aigineto-Athenian history, but where the one passes into the other it is not easy to determine. The turning point seems to lie in the record of the appeal of Aigina to Sparta, c. 85, with the visit of Leotychides to Athens, and his reputed speech to the Athenians, c. 86. Speaking roughly, the matter and stories are mainly Spartan from c. 52 to c. 86, and mainly Athenian from c. 87 to c. 93.

viii. The appeal of Aigina to Sparta: Leotychides at Athens. His speech (the story of Glaukos), cc. 85, 86.

ix. Renewal of hostilities between Athens and Aigina, cc. 87-93.

The chronology, or the anachronisms, of this passage, or series of passages, need not here be discussed; suffice it to say that with the exception of the obvious notes in cc. 71, 72, 83 we are not justified in concluding that Herodotus reckons any of the events recorded in this context as having occurred subsequently to Marathon. On the contrary, the only fair inference from his arrangement of the facts, or traditions, is that he conceives them all as belonging to a date before Marathon. This conception is, however, almost demonstrably erroneous.\(^1\) The observations upon which this judgment is based, and indeed the point now reached in this expository Analysis, suggest the elucidation, in the next place, of those express notices of post-Marathonian affairs which occur in these Books. The detection of such notices will prepare the way for the recognition of those anachronisms and afterthoughts, which, if they diminish or obscure the historic value of the work in one direction, serve to heighten its interest and evidential value in another.

§ 16. The passages, excursus, sentences or notes in the fourth, fifth, and sixth Books, which assert or imply post-Marathonian dates, are not all of one kind. It is convenient to distinguish the principal classes into which such notices fall:

J. A chronological difference is given and implied by every passage of an autobiographical kind, for obviously the author throughout his main narrative is writing of matters which are remote from his own day. He is not a contemporary authority for the things which form the bulk and the raison d'être of his work. There is a difference between the times about which he is writing, and the times in which he is writing. Explicit references to his own times, his own experiences, occur throughout the Books, independently of the many passages in which a personal observation, an autobiographical reference, is latent and problematic.3 Even passages expressing a personal opinion or view are of similar significance in this connexion.4 To determine the exact dates involved in these particular references is one of the last and most abstruse attempts of constructive criticism. In the final resort these passages contain the most important evidences for the solution of the problems of the time and place, or times and places, of the composition of the work, as a whole, or in its several parts. The dates given or implied in such passages are not, of course, the same, except so far as the author's age or lifetime be regarded as a single period or epoch. An expression of opinion by the author carries us down to the actual moment of composition. A statement of an actual personal experience implies a precise day and hour in his lifetime, if only it could be ascertained.2 Other references may be less precise, and suggest some chronological margin within the limits of the author's lifetime.⁵ But no such passage can be pushed back so as to overcome the chronological interval everywhere implied between the author's present and the past, about which he is writing. There is not, however, in the whole of these three Books any autobiographical passage which serves to determine with any precision the extent of that interval, or even to what generation the author belongs.6 There is, in short, no exact parallel to such passages as occur in the first 7 and in the last 8 volume of the work; nor even any clear proof that the author had conversed with the Marathonomachae.¹ Other classes of passages or references to post-Marathonian events make it plain that he might have done so; the absence of any clear evidence that he did is therefore all the more remarkable. The chronological hiatus suggests an important gap in the sources or tradition.²

II. A second group of references to the author's own days, as distinguished from the times about which he is writing, is created by the numerous notices of the sources from which he is professedly drawing. It is but seldom that a reference to a source, or authority for the writer's statements, is made otherwise than in the present tense. Where the reference is made in the past tense, either the case will clearly fall under the class of passages above noticed (I.),3 or the author is quoting a previous written authority,4 or the passage gives rise to a further problem.5 a rule, indeed, Herodotus cites his sources in the present tense; 6 his living authorities are his own contemporaries and not the actors or contemporaries of the events which he records; or if dead, they are still speaking. This practice of citing in the present must not, indeed, be made the basis of a narrow inference: it is artificial, literary, unscientific, or inexact. At most it brings the author within his own experience into more or less direct relation with a living tradition, or with an authority ex hypothesi verifiable at the time of writing. The phraseology of Herodotus incidentally confirms this impression, which would stand even without confirmation; for he does not draw substantial distinction between the loyos he has heard at some time or other, and the λόγος he is writing down, nor between the moment of inquiry and the moment of composition or record.8 The fundamental distinction which remains intact throughout is the chronological interval separating the author's own date, whether of investigation or of composition, from the dates of the events, which form the principal material of his narrative. But the exact determination of that interval is not ascertainable from his notices of the sources from which this portion of the work is derived.

III. A third class of references to the author's Present, or of passages which involve dates subsequent to the battle of Marathon (or to the Parian expedition), may conveniently be made out of a large number or mass of statements referring to existing objects, whether natural or artificial, or existing institutions and customs, or even the present state of nations, tribes, and cities.

From the nature of the case this class includes a prodigious amount of matters, but all with the common quality that they were ex hypothesi observable, verifiable by the historian himself and his contemporaries. Not, indeed, all equally verifiable; and so various and separable are the matters to be included in this class, that it is expedient to sub-divide it. One sub-division may contain the geographical and ethnographical passages which form a considerable feature in the literary Analyses of these Books. These passages contain, indeed, theory as well as fact, and errors as well as accurate knowledge; but this criticism does not affect their classification in the present connexion. The historical element in them is very small, from the author's point of view. He does not conceive himself as having to record changes in geographical fact, or events in the physical history of the earth.1 In the Books here in question he treats the physical environment and conditions of history as permanent and unchanging. Land and seas, mountains, deserts, rivers and lakes are regarded as always the same, or as not altering sufficiently to make the present-day description of them inapplicable to any previous time. Climate, flora and fauna are similarly regarded.

¹ The earthquake in Delos, 6.98, is a portent. The great convulsion of Thera (Santorin) is unknown to Hdt. See note to 4.147. There are no eclipses recorded in these Books. Dareios' canal. 4.39, is hardly an exception, much less Neco's, c. 42. The ½νος Ἡρακλέος, 4.82, is more like one, but not important. The origin of geographical names, 4.45, is not a physical problem. There is nothing like the passage, 2. 11, on the physical history of the Nile Valley. Hdt. does not 'harmonise' his account of the Scythian campaign with his description of the great rivers by the supposition that the rivers have made their appearance since the time of Dareios.

In describing all these matters Herodotus speaks in the present, on the implied hypothesis that in these respects there has been no historical change.

It is, of course, immaterial for the present purpose, whether the Herodotean descriptions are scientific or not. It may, however, be observed, in passing, that we are to go to Herodotus not so much for information in regard to the actual physical history or condition of the globe as for information in regard to the opinions held on the subject by himself, and those whom he represents or Respecting the flora and fauna, something more may be due to Herodotus. His statements in regard to the area covered by the silphium, 1 and in regard to the animals of Libva, 2 deserve attention, even though the silphium has disappeared or degenerated, and the camel, now the chief beast of burden in northern Africa, does not figure in his Libya. All, however, that immediately concerns the present argument or classification is the observation that, if Herodotus makes no difference under this head between past and present, describing the facts or features as they existed, or as he believed them to exist, in his own day, it is because he assumes the facts of his present as valid, in this connexion, for the past, and not because his sources of knowledge for the past history or events, of which the places described were the scenes, contained the geographical descriptions, which form the bulk of the digressions.

It is, perhaps, more remarkable that Herodotus should describe the ethnography, institutions, manners and customs of the natives in Scythia, Thrace and Libya with hardly a hint of any historic perspective. He recognises, indeed, some changes or attempted changes arising from the influence of Greek settlements in Scythia, and in Libya, as also the influence of Egypt upon the Libyans, since the historical period has begun; and the movements or disappearance of some tribes recorded may be thought to affect the political geography or the tribal frontiers of these non-Hellenic lands. But it is obvious, for the most part, that the habitations, the institutions, manners and customs of the uncivilised barbarians are described as they are, or are supposed to be, in his own time. Virtually the whole of the ethnographical and anthropological passages and notes may be segregated from the materials for past history, and classified, with the geographical excursus and notes, as material for the description of the world in the historian's own time, or in the historian's own mind. The exception here proves the rule: the record of change is the exception. case is widely different with the notices of Greek states, societies, institutions and laws. Here the historical note is uppermost, and the contrast between the historian's own time and the times he is describing almost everywhere expressed, or obviously to be understood. The constitution of Demonax, the Parian settlement of Miletos,2 the tyrannies of Ionia,3 or of Peloponnesos,4 are all here described as things of the past. Though Kleisthenes counts as the founder, or establisher, of the Athenian democracy,5 it is indicated that changes have been effected even since his day in Athenian institutions,6 and what is recorded here of that period (519-489 B.C.) must not be taken as a description of existing institutions. Among Greek states Sparta furnishes an exception. Herodotus does, indeed, record a new departure in Spartan custom, or law,7 but whatever inferences may be drawn from events as recorded by him, the implied assumption in regard to Sparta is that its customs and institutions are fixed in his own time as from the beginning, and where he goes out of his way to describe them, he treats them as matters of present observation.8 Thus, embedded in a legend of the prime, is to be found the memorable note on the Spartan practice of executing the death penalty at night.9 More general notices of Hellenic customs of ancient times, still in force, are involved in the remark on the cult of Stesagoras, 10 in the mention of the common gods, 11 and of the fixed rate of ransom among the Peloponnesians.12 Historic differences are implied in the remarks on the origin of Greek writing,1 the changes in dress,2 the institution of slavery.3 These contrasts lie outside the limit of the direct narrative in these Books (519-489 B.C.) Speaking generally it may be said that, where no express notice of change occurs, Herodotus may be assumed to hold that Hellenic customs, religious and political, have not undergone appreciable change between the day of Marathon and his own time.4

IV. Fourthly, in this class of references may be placed the list of passages in which Herodotus notices monuments, works of art, or similar objects still extant in his own day, though not, as a rule, works of his contemporaries. In some cases explicitly, in others at least implicitly, the notices of such objects contain the note of contrast between 'now' and 'then.' Among these notices it is hardly necessary to include the names of cities, except, indeed, where Herodotus asserts or implies the rebuilding of this or that city in the interval between the time of which he is writing and the time at which he is writing: as for example Gelonos, or Barke,7 or Sardis, or the Ionian cities generally,8 and Miletos with its temples in particular,0 or again Sybaris,10 or Athens itself.11 But short of cities, or their walls and buildings as a whole, works of less magnitude are even more in evidence. Thus Herodotus notices expressly as still extant and visible, and therefore verifiable, the tomb of the Kimmerian chiefs, 12 as well as some Kimmerian fortifications in Scythia,13 perhaps merely earth-works; likewise the remains of the eight forts ascribed to Dareios on the river Oaros. 4 A very explicit passage asserts the existence of a huge bronze bowl at Exampaios in Scythia 16 at the moment of writing, and the same passage records a krater set up by l'ausanias at the mouth of the Pontos as an object which any one might still go and see.1 Other passages, without actually asserting the existence of the objects or monuments named, may be taken to imply so much. The inscribed stelar of Darcios used by the Byzantines for the altar of Artemis, and the one stone left lying by the temple of Dionysos, were surely in existence in the writer's time, though he does not happen to say so explicitly.2 In regard to the inscription on the Tearos we may the more admire his reserve.3 It will be generally conceded that it is more probable that there were artificial mounds of stone on the Arteskos, in the territory of the Odrysae, than that it was Dareios who erected them; 4 but the description of the lake-dwellings in Lake Prasias 5 must rank as one of the most valuable contributions made by Herodotus to the description of antiquities extant in his own time, whatever the origin of his knowledge in the matter may have been. Whether the wall across the isthmus of the Thracian Chersonese was in existence in his time Herodotus does not expressly signify.6 It was a structure with a long and interesting history, and Miltiades was probably not the first and certainly not the last to be busy with it. The bridge over the Bosporos had utterly disappeared long before the historian's time, but who can doubt that the picture and epigram of Mandrokles were still to be seen in the Heraion at Samos, even though Herodotus merely records the historical fact of the offering having been made? 9 More explicit is the notice of the krater adorned with griffins' heads, and supported by three kneeling colossi, offered by Kolaios and his crew, and still to be seen in the Heraion as Herodotus wrote,9 In the Agora of Samos stands, the historian records, a stele, on which were inscribed the names of those eleven trierarchs who had not betrayed the common cause at Lade, 10 though they may have been afterwards among the treacherous freebooters who seized the fair city of Zankle.11 At Metapontion, in the Agora, was still standing, the historian notes, a statue of Aristeas side by side with that of Apollo, amid a bower of laurels. 12

On the Krathis stood the shrine of Athene, dating but from the time of Dorieus, or the Sybarites, in the historian's own time, could not have been appealing to it as evidence against the grants enjoyed by the Iamidae at Kroton.2 At Egesta the Heroon of Philip, a man of divine beauty, is in honour.3 The shrine of fair Helen may still be seen in Therapne above the shrine of Phoibos; 4 the Adrasteion is where it was, in the Agora of Sikyon.⁵ The temple of Delphi had been consumed by fire, but it stood in the historian's time as completed by Kleisthenes the Athenian.6 Hard by, in the Corinthian treasury, was lying a work of art well worth seeing, the censer presented by Evelthon of Kypros.7 At Thebes there were still to be seen inscribed offerings, which the historian thought might throw some light upon the early history of writing,8 and help to connect the Greek alphabet with the Phoenician: at Athens separate shrines attested the presence of the Kadmeian strangers, not less surely than the huge heap of refuse in Thasos, the work of early Phoenician explorers. 10

In regard to the Athens of his own day these books of Herodotus are, indeed, remarkably important. The conflagration in 480 B.C. had made of Athens and of its Akropolis a new city. This great event and its consequences Herodotus takes for granted: the wonder for him is, perhaps, that any remnants or monuments of the older Athens survive. It is not, indeed, clear whether he conceived Marathonian, or Peisistratid, Athens to have been a walled town, or has he occasion to notice specifically the Themistoklean walls, unless indeed the description of the burial place of Kimon involve such a reference. The tomb of Anchimolios at Alopeke hard by the Herakleion in Kynosargos, leaves the problem undecided. It is on the Akropolis that attention is concentrated by the natural course of the story. The 'Pelasgic wall' is mentioned as something that requires no explanation,1 but the grotto of Pan, in which ever since the day of Marathon the Arkadian god has been worshipped year by year, is located under the Akropolis.2 The temple and statue, mentioned in connexion with the sacrilegious attempt of the Spartan Kleomenes," cannot have been in existence in the historian's own time, and the temple behind the walls, which still showed traces of the Medic fire, must have been a restoration,4 like the walls themselves. Herodotus may have seen the fetters in which the Boeotian prisoners had erst been bound,5 though the notice of them does not fix a date for his sight of them: nor does he seem to have asked himself how these and other monuments had escaped the effects of the Persian invasion: and in particular the Quadriga standing on the left hand immediately as you enter the Propylaea with the epigram (of Simonides) on the base.6 The importance of this reference can, indeed, hardly be exaggerated. The monument seen by Herodotus is probably a Periklean restoration, perhaps a replica of the older one, but not dating earlier than the Thirty Years' truce.7 The Propylaea can hardly be any other than the Periklean Propylaca, finished in the year 433 B.C.8 Even so, this notice does not supply the latest date recorded or implied in the work of Herodotus, but it fits in with other passages to give precision to the date of the composition, or revision of his work. Finally, in the holy island of Delos are monumental objects, as Herodotus writes, which serve to keep alive or to confirm traditions which he records: the tomb of the Hyperborean maidens Hyperoche and Laodike,9 the costin of the maidens Arge and Opis, who had come to Delos from the same region still earlier; the great altar, whereon Datis had made a lordly offering, not many weeks before Marathon.

It is impossible to review this last batch of references without suspecting that the objects recorded or described in them were pregnant with historic associations, and must be taken into account, when the sources from which Herodotus drew his knowledge come to be reckoned up. The same remark applies with even more force to a further batch of references, which might here be brought into view, but may still more conveniently be postponed. Yet, in enumerating the monuments of the past, extant in the time of Herodotus, of which he was cognisant, and made use, while they marked for him a difference between the past and the present, the schedule would be incomplete without notice of the literary documents, tangible and material evidences in their way, which had come down to him from earlier authors. The line between the inscribed stone or metal and the book is a fine one, and it might be a mere accident whether a saying of Simonides were quoted from the one or from the other.3 But economy and convenience dictate here the postponement of the passages illustrating the use made by Herodotus of books, and such written documents. They may be more conveniently considered under the head of his sources.

V. Events 4 subsequent to Marathon, and most of them subsequent even to the siege of Sestos in 479-8 B.C., 5 are mentioned incidentally in these Books, and serve to determine with some precision the date of their composition or revision. From the date of Marathon to the date of the last of the events, so noticed, is a period of about sixty years. It is not possible to fix each of them to a particular year, or even in all cases to a particular decade, and in no case does the date of the event decide in itself the date of the passage in which it occurs; but as such references are historical, not prophetic, they fix an upward limit, and they tend to fix a lower limit for the collection of materials, and for the actual composition of the work.

The Median war, that is to say, the invasion of 480 B.C., is itself referred to explicitly in more than one passage,1 and less expressly in some others.2 And certain passages refer to events which occurred between the dates of Marathon and the invasion of Xerxes. If the Parian expedition belong to the continuous narrative of the sixth Book, yet the notice of the payment of the fine of 50 T. by Kimon must belong to a somewhat later point, though probably in this decade.3 The exact age of Perikles at his death is unknown, but his mother's dream, or at least his own birth, may fall after Marathon.4 The establishment of Nikodromos and his fellow-exiles at Sunion appears to be dated by Herodotus after Marathon,5 even though the conspiracy which resulted in his exile is dated before. The Olympiad of Alexander of is not easily determined, but might conceivably fall as late as 488 or 484 B.C. The rebellion of Aryandes 7 can hardly be identified with the revolt of Egypt after Marathon; 8 and therefore, although expressly post-dated in the text, where it occurs, probably belongs to the period within the express termini of these Books, though the mention of the Aryandic silver, still in circulation, brings the event down to the moment of composition. In regard to this group of eventful notices there is not one that can be very precisely dated. About ten or twelve references occur in these Books to occurrences between the Persian and the Peloponnesian wars. In regard to some of these, dealing primarily with Persian affairs, we must be content to date them within the limits of the reign of Xerxes, viz., the mission and end of Sataspes, perhaps the death of Skythes at the Persian court, 10 and even the upbringing of the sons of Metiochos. 11 Still more precisely is it possible to date the suit of Pausanias the Spartan for the hand of an Achaemenid princess, whether the lady was daughter of Xerxes, or of Megabates, 12 while Herodotus himself defines the period for the restoration of the gilded statue to Delion.13 The accession of Archidamos is involved in the notice of the end of Leotychides,14 and the passage therefore carries us down into the 'sixties,' within which decade also fall the destruction of Tiryns.1 The sack of the Lepreatis can hardly be dated before the close of the third Messenian war, and approaches the middle of the fifth century B.C., a date which Herodotus expressly regards as falling in his own times.2 The establishment of the Pan-cult on the Akropolis may full after the Medic war 3 in the days when Kimon, son of Miltiades, was the leading man in Athens, while in the implied expulsion of the Pelasgi from Lemnos and Imbros might lurk a reference to the Athenian kleruchies established by Perikles after the Thirty Years' truce.4 The most precise and interesting passages are those that may be more or less plausibly referred to the Peloponnesian war and its immediate circumstances. Of these cases there are at least three in the present Books. The expulsion of the Aiginetans from their island 5 can scarcely be referred to any other event than that recorded by Thucydides, and dated precisely to 431 B.C., a time when ideas connected with sacrilege were in the air.7 If the Delian earthquake recorded by Herodotus8 be identified with the one recorded by Thueydides, the same epoch may be reached; and in any case the reference in the passage to the Persian kings, and to the struggles of the Hellenic Koryphaci for supremacy, even though Artaxerxes be not dead, nor the Ten Years' war already half over when the passage was first writ, still brings us within measurable distance of its outbreak. To the same period has by some scholars been referred the passage recording the fate of Skyles, and the composition effected on the Danube by Oktamasades and Sitalkes. 10 But Sitalkes was an interesting personage some years before the Peloponnesian war, and the historical and chronological requirements would be satisfied even if the extradition of Skyles were dated 12-15 years before the revolt of Potidaia; though, doubtless, elsewhere in Herodotus we have indubitable evidence of the importance of the Thracian king at that precise moment.11

§ 17. There remains to be noticed a number of passages, in which events are recorded belonging to dates subsequent to

Marathon, though Herodotus has anachronistically ante-dated them. The oracle, which presupposes eight Battiad princes, may be taken to belong to this class,1 and with it may rank the oracles foretelling the subjugation of Aigina by Athens,2 and the prophecies of Hippias touching the days when Corinth should suffer grievously at the hands of Athens.3 The verifications of these oracles all fall well before the middle of the century, for even the last did not wait its fulfilment till the quarrel over Korkyra; but belonging, as they do, to the main texture of the narrative, and having less the air of subsequent additions, they are of especial weight in determining the date of composition; unless, indeed, they are to be regarded as genuine prophecies. A more subtle anachronism may lurk in the figure assigned to the total number of Athenian male citizens at the time of the visit of Aristagoras.4 In three other cases Herodotus has apparently dated before Marathon events in Spartan history, which should have been placed thereafter: (1) the flight of Demaratos from Sparta to Asia;5 (2) the death of Kleomenes, with its immediate antecedents; 6 (3) the visit of Leotychides to Athens.7 To these must be added (4) the records of the warfare between Aigina and Athens growing immediately out of them.8 The occurrence in the latter context of a notice which must be dated to 431 B.C., does not necessarily carry the whole story down to that date; but, in any case, as all these events may be dated to the decade between Marathon (490 B.C.) and Salamis (480 B.C.), ample time is allowed for the distortion of the true sequence and perspective, before the date at which Herodotus compiled the narrative in these Books.

The greatest and the subtlest anachronism of all still remains to be discovered; it is the anachronistic spirit, or tone, which pervades the whole story, or series of stories, forming the continuous narrative of the Persian campaigns, and even the Hellenic record for the years 519-489 B.C. as given in these Books. This tone is traceable in the main to two closely related causes: (1) the tendency to review the memories, the traditions, the whole bequest of that generation in the light of later events, especially in the light of the 'Medic war,' and the final victory of the

Greeks; (2) the tendency to impart a moral or quasi-religious meaning to the story, or stories, of the past. Both tendencies combine to substitute afterthoughts for the simple record of facts. In some cases even more immediate interests, of a personal or political kind, may have to be reckoned with. No critical student can cite any story, or even any statement-from these Books, as historic or authoritative, without having satisfied himself whether, and to what extent, the passage betrays the influence of this subtle pragmatism. It is much more obviously present in some cases than in others, and where least apparent is, of course, most detrimental. Every one can see that the story of the Scythian expedition is largely a romance to illustrate a moral; that the sin ($\vartheta\rho\rho\rho\rho) of Dareios is there pilloried, even as the sin of Kyros, of Kambyses, of Xerxes elsewhere: but it is not always perceived that the story of the defeat of Xerxes is, perhaps, the older story, and even Grote accepted the account of the conduct of the Ionians at the Danube, without inquiring how far it was a fiction framed in the interests of Miltiades, and of Athens. It has not generally been considered to what extent the accounts of the Ionians and their conduct throughout these Books have been affected by later situations and later interests. The unfavourable judgment upon them, put into the mouths of the barbarous Scyths,1 is not seriously qualified by their subsequent struggle for liberty against Persians and despots; Dareios took their measure,2 and the story of the revolt, and specially its finale at Lade, exhibit their weakness and incapacity. Whether the ill-will shown to the Ionians is to any extent due to the personal animus of the Dorian writer, who leaves the treatment and behaviour of the Dorian Greeks in Asia out of account throughout this story, is not an unfair question. It is at the expense of Ionians, if at all, that Herodotus betrays a little Otherwise he might have found a better reason for the reforms of Kleisthenes at Athens than the one which he assigns as his own deliberate judgment.3 It is at the geography of the Ionians that the Dorian laughs,4 and against his own greatest predecessor, an Ionian statesman and historian, that he seems to bear a somewhat special grudge. Yet, after all, Herodotus pays Ionia the compliment of writing in Ionic, and of going to Ionic sources for a good deal of his history, which is, moreover, to some extent a not unfriendly history of Ionian states.3 Even here the discoloration of his narratives is arguably due more to the condition of his sources than to personal bias or ill-will.4 The conduct of the Ionians on the Danube comes from a tainted and interested source, and in any case the discredit, such as it is, lay primarily with the tyrants, whose political dependence on the Persian it is one of the merits of the story to exhibit.⁵ The story of the Ionian revolt looks, in part, like a justification of the Athenian hegemony and empire. The Athenians could insist upon their 'metropolitan' relation to the Ionians, when it suited them.7 Grote, in his politic way, drew a parallel and contrast between the battle of Lade and the battle of Salamis, and pointed the moral, that it justified the subsequent overlordship of Athens:8 he forgot, however, to ask how far this moral had already been at the making of the story. Of a truth the moral of the three enslavements of Ionia⁰ was that the Ionians were incapable of liberty, and had but a choice of masters. This judgment is historically verified; but the particular stories which illustrate it may have been affected in the telling by the foregone con-Moreover, it was difficult to do justice to the almost unaided and all but successful effort of Ionia to emancipate itself from foreign and domestic lords, without seeming to censure the policy and inaction of Athens and of Sparta during the revolt.¹⁰

The anachronistic spirit, the element of afterthought, are nowhere more conspicuously present than in the story of Marathon.

In spite of the consciousness that things have changed in Athens since then, even the constitutional position is misconceived, and in other respects there is hardly an element in the later Marathonian legend which is not already present in the story as told by Herodotus. One legitimate conclusion from this observation is in favour of assigning a relatively late date to the compilation of that story. This topic is, however, so fully discussed elsewhere that it is needless to pursue it farther in this place. It is not, however, merely in the three great subjects, which occupy respectively the fourth, fifth and sixth Books of Herodotus, that the influence of late reflection upon the story of the past may be detected supplying elements of moral and literary motive, as in the story of the Scythic campaign; of political bias, as in the accounts of the Ionian revolt and the Ionians generally; of patriotic exultation, as in the story of Marathon: the same influence is to be discovered, here more strongly, there more mildly, in almost every compact and complete story in these Books, whether belonging to the direct narrative, or to one or other of the numerous asides. If the story of Pheretime's revenge suggests a pious moral,2 the story of the escape of Kyrene from the Persian yoke is a transparent apology for the unpatriotic attitude of that state in the Medic wars.3 The story of Alexander and the young men in women's apparel lies under similar suspicion.4 The story of the Naxian expedition can hardly be taken au pical de la lettre.5 The story of the reception of Aristagoras at Sparta is largely a suppressio veri and a suggestio falsi.6 The account of the first campaign of Mardonios is plainly coloured by the desire to discredit one of the most brilliant enemies of Hellas.7 In his account of the Parian expedition Herodotus has almost demonstrably gone out of his way to prefer a less historical version in the interests of a moral theory.8

The case is not very different with the stories which have little or nothing to do with the Persian wars. Afterthought of one kind or another has been at the making of them, and has diminished their historical authority. They are not pure traditions or memorials, they are inversions, or perversions, of the facts to an extent varying from ease to ease. The story of the Minyae at Sparta inverts the actual facts in the political interests of the existing situation.1 The stories of the colonisation of Thera and of Kyrene are similarly, if not to the same extent, affected by existing interests.2 The story of the origin of the dual royalty is manifestly an actiological fiction.3 The records of Sparta, in the reign of Kleomenes, form a series of stories, in which the pragmatic or fictitious elements vary from comparative innocence and obscurity in the account of Dorieus,4 to the astounding impositions to be detected in the stories of the Argive war,5 and of the death of Kleomenes.⁶ It is comparatively well with us, when instead of a rationalised history we have good anecdotes, the saving of Kypselos,7 the advice of Thrasybulos,8 the necromancy of Periandros,9 the wealth of Alkmaion,10 the wedding of Agariste,11 the horrors of Lemnos:12 for in these cases the reader, who could fail to suspect the presence of the 'well-born falsehood,' is capable of accepting the story of the Clever Thief13 as sober history, and must be left to provide his own canons of historic probability.

$ 18. A very erroneous impression would remain if the detection and exposure of the large element of fiction, of afterthought, the sport of fancy or the more calculated result of local interests, were to be taken as depriving the tales told by Herodotus of substantial historical value, or denying to Herodotus the possession of a critical faculty. The true appreciation of the historical value of the work of Herodotus does not lie simply in the substitution of one point of view for another. Doubtless the damage undergone in depreciating his work regarded as history of a past that was past to him, is compensated to a greater or less extent by the gain which accrues from discovering in it traces, evidences, influences of his own times, which are past to us. the historical value of the work of Herodotus is very far from exhausted by that consolatory substitution of a history of the author's present for the author's history of the past. It must, of course, be remembered that there is much in the work which professedly deals with matter open to the writer's own observation, either actual or potential; all that must rank now as historical, in the first degree, saving so far as exception is taken successfully, on the score of deliberate and wilful misstatement of which in these three Books there is little or none established: or so far as allowance has to be made for scientific error, as in geographical measurements and so on-in which cases the matter falls into the second degree, and remains valuable as a contribution to the history of science and of literature. But over and above all matters belonging professedly to his own time, or reducible to a value of that kind, the historical value of the work of Herodotus must be sought in the results of two applications of critical method. In the first place, it is but seldom in the work of Herodotus that we are dealing with mere myths, even mere legends, against the utilisation of which, for historical purposes, Grote brought a heavy, perhaps an irrefutable, indictment.1 the stories told by Herodotus we are dealing, almost invariably, with historic persons and with historic conditions. doubtless partly due to this cause that in a large number of cases, even where other evidences, literary or monumental, direct or indirect, are not forthcoming, the attempt may still be made, not without success, to sift the fact from the fiction, and to determine, with some probability, the actual course of events. Not very much reflection is required to show that our knowledge today of the course of Greek history and affairs for the generation that closed the sixth and opened the fifth century B.C. is based mainly upon the work of Herodotus; and the period (519-489 B.C.) covered by these Books may be extended with no less assurance at least ten years later, and may be run back at least to the age of Peisistratos,2 if not to the age of Gyges and Psammetichos, when the whole work is taken into the account. Beyond that epoch an indefinite vista opens back into the origins of Hellenic and non-Hellenic societies, to which the contribution of Herodotus is not inconsiderable. The one simple test of the transcendent value of the work of Herodotus as a substantial basis and source for ancient history is the question: What would the world now-a-days know of the subject if the work of Herodotus had never been written? The one fatal error is to treat the work, in each of its three parts, in every Book, in each natural sub-division, in each particular story, or anecdote, as equally historical or unhistorical, as equally valuable or valueless, for historical purposes. The historical value of the work varies from volume to volume, from Book to Book, from chapter to chapter, almost from sentence to sentence. But if the time is gone by when the work could be dismissed as a 'pack of lies,' the time is equally gone by when the mere citation of a Book and chapter of Herodotus can be taken as definitive. The nature of the statement in itself, the nature of the context, agreement or difference with other statements, or with alternative versions, the source, obvious or probable, the interest, if any, and the general probabilities of the case must all be reckoned with before positive authority is conceded; doubtless with the result that, in a large number of cases, the version, account or statement of facts preserved by Herodotus will be dismissed as untrue, or at best admitted as possible.

In the second place, it is worth while to observe that there is a mass of particular statements of fact in the work of Herodotus, which may pass almost unchallenged into the historical order. The work of Herodotus is an artful maze or labyrinth of particular stories, held together by a master plan: many, perhaps the majority, of these stories are artistically complete, each in itself. But such art is suspect. It is the incomplete story, the casual reference, the statement of fact, which has little or no relation to its context, which is most likely, caeteris paribus, to be historical. Where no other purpose is to be served by a statement, the purpose served is the purely historical interest. Where a statement occurs, not as part of a more or less obviously pragmatic story, but simply because it is in itself known to the author and worthy of mention, the probability is that the statement is true. example, the very fact that the notice of the Phoenician circumnavigation of Libya occurs in the fourth Book,1 and not as an item in a systematic account of the maritime policy of Neco in the second Book, is an additional argument in favour of its historic reality. Again, the story of the Scythic expedition is mainly fictitious, but the casual notice that Darcios recrossed into Asia from Sestos,2 an action apparently inconsequent and not explained, is eminently credible on that very account. The story of the interview between Kleomenes and Aristagoras¹ is open to many adverse criticisms; but who will doubt the mention of the pinax exhibited by Aristagoras to be based upon a genuine Spartan memory?² The story of the Plataean alliance makes Kleomenes a chief agent;³ this detail, and indeed the whole story, is all the more authoritative seeing that Herodotus has not rationalised the matter by bringing it into chronological conformity with the expeditions of Kleomenes recorded in the fifth Book. Conversely, it seems more probable that the conspiracy of Nikodromos in Aigina⁴ is genuine history than that it is correctly chronologised, for it occurs in a context where Herodotus seems to have lost his way in an inconsequent attempt to systematise the history of the Aigineto-Athenian feud.

§ 19. As hardly anything is known of Herodotus apart from what is to be learnt from his work, it is small profit to argue from his character or reputation apart from the work. But the analytical estimate of the historical authority of the work in its various component parts, divisions, elements and factors may seem unsatisfactory to two classes of students: those, on the one hand, who have appraised the whole work in every part at the value to be set upon its best elements; those, on the other hand, who have involved the whole and every part in a condemnation, hardly justifiable even if limited to its weakest spots. But the times are now favourable for a discriminative verdict, and the methods indicated in the preceding pages, and applied in those which follow, will probably commend themselves to scholars and historians as sound, however great the difference of opinion may be on the results in detail. Perfect agreement cannot be expected in regard to particular cases and passages. It should, however, be universally recognised that the most stringent application of historical and critical methods to the text of Herodotus leaves the work irremovably and irreplaceably at the head of European prose literature, whether in its scientific or in its artistic character. those capable of realising intelligently the conditions under which

Herodotus collected and composed his materials, the growing wonder must be the triumphant issue of his labour in a work which is not merely a monument of his own genius, a mirror of his own times, but an almost inexhaustible treasury of knowledge respecting times that were to him, as to us, past and gone. It must be admitted that a writer capable of offering readers or hearers such a story as the story of the Scythian expedition for a sober or serious version of actual events, does not compose history on our principles, and falls far short of the standard announced by his junior contemporary Thucydides. On the other hand, it may be easily perceived that a premature application of the methods of Thucydides to the subject, or great series of subjects, which form the theme of Herodotus, might only have led to a result of far less historical value and authority than the actual work now in our hands. Herodotus might have gained consistency and forfeited truth: exterminated the evidences and obtained a personal verdict: established his own authority by obliterating his authorities. His method of telling stories has preserved more history for us than would otherwise have survived the later and more systematic pragmatism of the fifth and fourth centuries B.C. He is for us the first historian because he is the last, or at any rate the best of the Logographers. He preserves the historic material even where he does not use it historically. His merits as a writer, as an artist, as a prose-poet are generally recognised. It is something to have written the best story-book in Greek literature, perhaps in European literature. No other Greek writer has covered so large a world with so full a population of living and immortal men and women as Herodotus (no, not even his master, Homer). The work of Herodotus is a prose Iliad and Odvssey in one, rich in episodes and details, and more indisputably one and indivisible than either Epos. Had occasions or fashions served, Greek playwrights might have gone to Herodotus as to an almost inexhaustible mine of plots and subjects for tragedy and comedy. His pathos is profound: his humour intinite. Neither the superstition nor the sophistry of his age affects him so deeply as to distort irremediably the mirror which he holds up to the ages and generations of the world as he knew it. Upon the whole, he is not merely the most delightful but the most instructive of the Hellenes. The mind reflected in his pages is sane and sage. We moderns are baffled by his art and genius: the results look more like the voices of many peoples than the utterance of one man. We can hardly understand how an early adventurer accomplished so much. We can hardly tell whether the wonderful effects are due to design or to accident. The work is a problem, a store-house of problems, in art as well as in history. It is enough to engage the attention of many students and commentators from many points of view. Each generation looks at it in something of a fresh light, finding new interests in it, and new solutions for its problems. No consideration of it has been final, and none has been complete. Nor is any commentary superfluous, or unserviceable, which succeeds in asserting fresh, or forgotten, aspects of the work as a whole, and in elucidating the character and value of its component parts or elements. regard to the portion here immediately under view, three problems, or groups of problems, remain to be discussed, albeit their fuller solution may require the exploration of the whole work. There remain for discussion problems concerning the sources from which these Books have been drawn; concerning the evidences afforded by these Books in regard to the author's researches and autopsy; concerning the materials contained in these Books for an estimate of his own conscious mind and methods. With these three groups of problems severally the remainder of this Introduction deals. Only when the two former have been, at least provisionally, described, can we be in a position to complete, provisionally, our estimate of the genius of Herodotus, by including therein his qualities, as critic and philosopher.

§ 20. In regard to the Sources from which Herodotus derived so much of these Books as cannot be matter of his own creation, mere general statements, or a mere abstract classification, cannot be of much service. Here, as with every important problem concerning the composition of the work, it is essential to distinguish between part and part, element and element, story and story, sometimes almost sentence and sentence. The old-fashioned view that the work of Herodotus, as a whole, was the product, or redaction, of oral tradition has been much discredited of late; 1 yet it may be found, on further examination, to be the most probable and reasonable account to be given of the last three Books.1 Further, if coupled with the hypothesis that the last three Books, the third volume of the Histories as we have them, formed originally a substantive work, or at least were substantially complete, before the previous volumes assumed their present form, that view would go some way towards explaining the semblance of oral tradition, which the work undoubtedly wears in every part. The predominant nature of the sources for the last part of the work, which first engaged the author, has, on this hypothesis, deeply affected the form and character of the work as a whole, and in every part. At the same time it will be generally recognised that the mere occurrence of the formulae of oral tradition is far from justifying the inference that the passage in which they occur is based wholly and solely on bare word of mouth. There is an extreme ambiguity in the employment of such formulae in Herodotus' diction, as in the usage of our own language at the present day, and the formulae proper in the first instance to the word spoken are freely used of the word written. The word may have been written in order to be read aloud and heard; it remains legible but inaudible, or only potentially audible. A few crucial cases will prove that the formulae of the living voice occur in passages not derived by the author from oral tradition:

(1) Herodotus applies the terms of oral tradition to his own work, which is manifestly and explicitly a written work. He 'speaks'—one 'says' it naturally—of his whole work as a $\lambda \acute{o}\gamma o\varsigma$, and of portions of it as $\lambda \acute{o}\gamma o\iota$, and in referring from one part, or passage, in the written work to another, he uses the phraseology of audible speech. He also naturally uses the more precise term applicable to written words, and he uses terms which are ambiguous and indifferent. Thus, although similar phraseology is undoubtedly used of spoken speech, it is obvious that the formulae in themselves carry little weight in deciding whether material introduced under them has come to Herodotus from a strictly oral source or not.

- (2) He cites in terms proper to oral statement, sources, or authorities, which were undoubtedly not living voices, but manuscripts, in prose or verse. Thus Hekataios, the only prose-writer whom he expressly names, is an ἀνὴρ λογοποιός,¹ and in quoting from one of the written works of Hekataios, Herodotus uses most emphatically the phraseology of oral speech.² Exactly similar terms are used of the manuscript of the Arimuspea, attributed to Aristeas, side by side with references, in the same terms, to genuinely vocal statements.³ It is therefore obvious that Herodotus not merely applies the terminology of oral speech to his own work and writings, but cites the written works of other writers in similar formulae.
- (3) The point here asserted is further established by the observation that Herodotus, in referring to documents, which he may or may not have seen, but the existence or contents of which he reports, uses in regard to them language proper to living voices. The oracles found by Kleomenes in the Athenian Akropolis and carried to Sparta are vocal. The tripods at Thebes say their say in incised hexameters, and the inscriptions of Dareios tell their own story. Two notable documents are unfortunately silent, or indifferent, in the pages of Herodotus, the despatch of Dareios to Megabazos, ordaining the transportation of the Paionians, and the bible of Histiaios, which came into the hands of Artaphrenes. Similarly indifferent is the term used of the word or words tattooed on the head of the trusty messenger from Histiaios to Aristagoras, but it will hardly be contended that in any of these cases the language of audible speech, if applied to the written message, would have been surprising, or anomalous, judged by the practice of Herodotus, or even by our own. If, then, in regard to his own written work, in regard to the manuscripts of his predecessors, and in regard to written documents, which he has occasion to cite or mention in the course of his narrative, Herodotus freely uses the language of oral speech, it is obvious that the use and prevalence of such formulae in respect to his sources, or authorities throughout, is very far in itself and by itself from proving that he did not employ written authorities to a considerable extent. In short, so ireely are the terms lóyos, légel, bagi et sim used of written authorities that, except where Herodotus expressly notifies oral communications, it is difficult to be sure that he is not using a written source in regard to matters which certainly, or probably, had been committed to writing before his time. This conclusion may serve at least as a corrective to exaggerated assumptions in regard to the place of the vex viva among Herodotus' sources.

A second corrective to exaggerated views of the extent of Herodotus' oral sources is supplied by a canon, to be expressed as follows: the nominal citation of authorities by Herodotus cannot be taken, without further criticism, as proof that he himself had the statement, or passage, so introduced, from the authorities so named, much less from those authorities in loco. It cannot safely be assumed that, when Herodotus names any nation, tribe or corporation as authority for a story, or a statement, he has himself had the matter from the lips of men of that nation, tribe or city, still less that he has visited and conversed with them in their native place. There are several other possibilities, which are not excluded by the methods and standards of Herodotus, As the story, apparently based on oral information, may be derived by Herodotus from a written authority, so the nominal authority for the story may have been taken over by him from his written source.1 Or again, authorities quoted nominally to him in conversation may reappear in his text at first hand. Even in cases where he may be quoting information given to him by word of mouth, and by the men named in his text, he may have encountered his informants elsewhere than in their native Thus, for example, when Carthaginians are cited, we are not justified in concluding that Herodotus had been in Carthage, for he might have met Carthaginians elsewhere, in Sicily, in Egypt; nor in concluding that he had conversed with Carthaginians at all, for he might have found the Carthaginians quoted as authorities in a book, or might have heard them so quoted in conversation. Nor is this all: another and less obvious possibility must be contemplated. The nominal citation of an authority may be due to an inference, an act of judgment, on the historian's part. Thus, for example, after narrating the end of Kleomenes, Herodotus records no less than five explanations of the king's awful doom, four of them agreeing in one point, that the end of Kleomenes was a divine judgment for a crime, but differing as to the particular crime for which it had been divinely ordered. The Argives, the Athenians, the Hellenes generally, each had their own theory of the particular crime in question; Herodotus himself differed from all three on this point; the Spartans raised the previous question, and explained the madness and death of the king on purely natural grounds.2 For his own theory Herodotus is, of course, himself responsible. He had certainly been in Sparta;3 and the nature of the account in itself makes it probable that he reports the Spartan view at first hand. But how did he arrive at the Athenian, the Argive, the general Hellenic views? It cannot be denied that Herodotus may have questioned Athenians in Athens, Argives in Argos, and Hellenes generally, either in Hellas generally or at Delphi in particular: but neither can it be denied that the report and assignment of the views severally might be, to a greater or less extent, the result of inference on the part of Herodotus himself, or of his informants, or authorities. The actual facts as accredited must, of course, have been first published or made known by Spartans. Once the Spartan statement of fact was accepted, any Greek might infer without much hesitation the view which Athenians, or Argives, or Hellenes would take of its significance: the Athenians would see in the Spartan king's doom the expiation of a crime on Attic soil, the Argives would transfer the motive to

Argos, while Hellenes in general would turn with more pious satisfaction to the crime against the common sanctuary. Even if any statements made by the historian were due to inferences, or combinations of his own or of others, they might have some truth in them. In the present instance, however, there are two special reasons for doubting whether the nominal authorities introduced by Herodotus, for the various views reported, would have stood in every case the test of verification on the spot. In the first place, Herodotus is here, to some extent, 'improving the occasion,' having his own particular theory on the subject to ventilate; something is gained for the main issue by the widespread consensus as to the supernatural significance of the event, something is gained for the historian's own hypothesis by the conflict among three other rival hypotheses. In the second place, the story, though necessary in order to bear out the alleged theory of the Argives, is not an Argive but a Spartan story. We are in possession of the Argive version of the war with Kleomenes, and it differs materially from the story in Herodotus.1 The particular outrage on the grove of Argos is not, indeed, excluded by the Argive story, but the purely Spartan account of the war, given by Herodotus, seems to make it doubly improbable that Herodotus had consulted Argives, whether in Argos or elsewhere, touching this whole matter. he done so, he could hardly have remained ignorant of the Argive version of the affair, some points in which are almost necessary to explain inconsequences or obscurities in the Spartan story, which he follows; and ignorance is here the sufficient explanation of their omission. It is not, however, on this or any particular instance alone that the case stands for allowing room for inference, judgment, hypotheses in the nominal citation of authorities by Herodotus. Other considerations supervene. It has been generally allowed that Herodotus was not acquainted with any language but Greek.2 Though he cites Scythians,3 Libyans,4 Persians,5 Lydians,6 Carthaginians,7 and other 'barbarian' authorities, he cannot have conversed with them in their own languages. If he is not quoting interpreters, or written authorities, or barbarians who spoke Greek, or Greeks who named the barbarians cited, he is giving the ultimate source inferentially. How easily such inferences are made, and with what good show of reason, may be demonstrated by our own methods in dealing with the text of Herodotus itself. Herodotus does not always nominate his authorities or sources, immediate or ultimate; but we can generally supply the omission with a greater or less assurance from self-evident or internal indications. Thus the origines of the story of the battle of Marathon are not specified; but who can hesitate long to ascribe it to Athenian traditions?1 The speech put into the mouth of Leotychides might have been heard in Athens, or in Sparta; but is a Delphic source to be regarded as inadmissible?2 The conjecture of Schweighäuser, which actually introduces nominatim the Lakedaimonians instead of the Athenians as authorities in the story of the liberation of Athens, is based upon a consideration of the subject matter and the method of the story itself.3 It is a legitimate exercise of critical discrimation to assign, upon the evidence of such internal indications, various portions, longer and shorter, in the work of Herodotus to the sources from which he derived the matters in question, immediately or mediately; and this operation he may himself have already practised upon his raw materials. In fine, some room must be allowed, in the nomination of authorities by Herodotus, for the play of inference on his part; although the practical result is not so much to invalidate the evidence of his nominees as to restrict the supposed area of his travels, and the activity of his conversation.4

On the other hand, if the dependence upon oral information were to be restricted to the passages wherein it is expressly cited by the historian, or implicitly ascertained, it would be all too much diminished and denied. Herodotus but seldom expressly notices that a statement, anecdote, or story has been imparted to him by word of mouth; and the statements so introduced are not always of much historical importance.⁵ For the most part the express signals of this evidence occur in connexion with relatively trivial matter and anecdotes. It is also observable that they occur chiefly in the fourth Book. The geography, ethnography, and anthropology of Herodotus are largely matters of hearsay: historical subjects which fall within his own lifetime, or shortly before, are presumably reported from oral or visual sources; doubtless also a large and indefinite amount of what goes to make up his main narrative is drawn or reinforced from oral tradition, conversation, anecdote, not infrequently heard and gathered in connexion with visible monuments and memorials of the past. But an examination of the actual phraseology of Herodotus throws us back, in the main, for the delimitation of the portions or elements based exclusively on oral testimony, of one kind or another, upon considerations other than the express guarantee of the writer himself.

A similar remark holds in regard to the matters reported on the evidence of the writer's own eyesight. From the nature of the ease it could only be geographical and ethnographical facts, and so-called archaeological evidences, which Herodotus might owe to this source. It is again remarkable how little is expressly and explicitly referred thereto. In the three Books here immediately in question there are only three express appeals to the author's own eyesight.² There are, besides, half-a-dozen passages at most, in the fourth Book, where the actual phraseology may be taken to imply autopsy on the writer's part.³ These passages are again comparatively unimportant, and their chief interest lies in the light they throw upon the problems of the writer's life and

exphranto); and the same story furnishes in a note the explanation of such transfers (6. 111 από ταύτης σφι της μάχης ктл.). To matters of ritual and cult may be ascribed not a little in the story of the Atheno-Aiginetan wars, even if the inferences have come to Herodotus ready-made (5. $2-88, $9); from that source may have been borrowed details in the stories of the Minyae (4, 146), and of the Macedonian reception of the Persians (5, 20). To this source has been traced some elements in the story or stories of the Argive war (6, 77, 81, and Plutarch, Mor. 245). The extent to which historical events have been commemorated by rites, and ritual in turn has affected historiography, even in this

 Blakesley in his Introduction pp.

² Blakesley in his Introduction pp. xxv. ff. laid just emphasis upon the importance of temples, and temple-meetings (πανηγόρειs), as sources of myths, traditions, chronicles. Later criticism has pointed out the probable transfer of points, acts, features from cult-practice, or ritual, to the historical record. To such a source has been traced (see Λ. Mommsen, Heortologic p. 211) one of the strangest exaggerations in the story of Marathon (6. 112 δρόμφ ἐπ πολεμίσει

From the inscribed monument or object to the written authority is but a step, or rather a mere change in terminology, for it is hard to say where the monumental evidence ends and the documentary or manuscript evidence begins. After the comparatively scanty evidences of autopsy and of hearsay expressly recorded, or implicitly afforded, by these Books, the large number of references to literary evidences or documents is the more striking. Even omitting the inscribed offerings or objects,1 we encounter throughout these Books a mass of references, or citations, explicitly or implicitly based on literary documents, or written authorities. Some of these cases may be more or less problematic: the general result, however, compels the conclusion that the text of Herodotus is to a large and indefinite extent based upon literary sources of one kind or another. It would be a mistake to recognise among these sources only poetical works: and it is important to observe that Herodotus (like Thucydides), while referring only to one prose-writer expressly by name, uses phraseology which assumes a command of all existing Greek literature, whether in verse or in prose. Herodotus will commemorate of the kings of the Dorians what no other writer has recorded.2 The phrase covers prose-authors as well as poets. A little before he uses terms which imply a control over the whole poetic literature of Hellas.3

The incidental references to poetic writers by name bear out the general assumption. Herodotus was not writing a history of Greek literature, but his incidental citations are

We now know that the alter of the twelve gods was inscribed 6. 108, cp. Thuc. 6. 54. But besides these, the kraters and other anathemata, tombs, etc. mentioned by Herodotus were probably inscribed (c.g. 6. 103).

2 6. 55 τὰ δὲ άλλοι οὐ κατελάβοντο τούτων μιήμην ποιήσομαι. This phrase applies to the particular matter in hand, and cannot be generalised into a maxim for Herodotus' whole work. In the preceding passage 6. 53 τὰ λεγόμεια ὑπ' Ἑλλήνων obviously includes written genealogies.

3 6. 52 Λακεδαιμόνιοι γάρ ὁμολογέοντες οὐδενί ποιητή λέγουσι. The Lakedaimonian λόγος which follows is not necessarily a mere oral tradition, nor necessarily derived by Herodotus himself from a Lakedaimonian source. He may have had it from a Logographer numerous, and imply a background of further possibilities. Even in these three Books he cites by name Homer, 1 Hesiod, 2 Aristeas,3 Solon,4 Alkaios,5 Simonides,6 and his reference to Olen 7 may fairly be taken to imply an acquaintance with poems in writing, ascribed to the Lykian seer. The references to Aristeas, Solon, Alkaios, and Simonides are of especial importance here, as they are made in connexion with matters which belong essentially to the scheme and subject matter of these Books. The same remark governs the reference to the Drama of Phrynichos, the loss of which leaves us free to conjecture that there is more in the text of Herodotus due to that work than appears at first sight. The reference to one son of Euphorion 9 would in itself carry an inference to the works of the other, even if Aischylos were not elsewhere named; 10 and Aisehylos probably had something to say to the making of the story of Marathon. Herodotus' acquaintance with the poets may on the whole have had more influence on the form, style, and mechanism of his history than on its materials and subjects: but his knowledge of the poetic literature makes it additionally improbable that he was unacquainted with the prose-writers, such as there were; and if his own style was different from theirs, and showed a recurrence to the ideas and principles of literature as a fine art, this very reaction, or advance, in itself implies a knowledge of the actual state of prose-writing, which particular references further confirm. If Herodotus mentions the geographers, the Ionian geographers, mainly to ridicule them, 12 yet it is almost a matter of course that he used their materials and knowledge, wherever it seemed to him sound: even as he accepted the genealogies of the great houses, which were certainly in writing.¹³ It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of such writings for the earlier chronology and perspective of Greek history as presented by Herodotus. The loss of the works of Hekatajos, and other contemporary writers, deprives us of the one complete and satisfactory method of determining the exact extent of the actual debt of Herodotus

to Hekataios and the Logographers: but to deny it altogether, or to reduce it to the bare minimum involved in the explicit or demonstrable references, is unsound and illogical, and would involve, by analogy, the reduction of the oral traditions in the work to the passages where the formulae were conclusive, and the limitation of the area of Herodotus' journeys and sightseeing by the express and indubitable evidence of his autopsy and travels.

The written authorities, or documents, employed by Herodotus in the composition of these Books were by no means limited to authors, whether in verse or in prose. The smaller the element recognised as derivable from actual authors the more material remains to be ascribed to other documentary sources. Perhaps the most indubitable class of documents which reappear in the text of Herodotus is to be found in the oracles, whether in verse or in prose, whether Delphic, or from some less august revelation. It is little short of incredible that the isolated oracles, given originally as hypothesi to divers persons at divers times and occasions, and preserved by Herodotus ipsissimis verbis, were simply reported to him orally. They were certainly preserved in writing at the centres of inspiration, and probably in copies by the cities, houses, or persons immediately concerned.2 The question is whether Herodotus took these oracles over from historical works, or from other documentary sources.3 That collections of oracles existed, other than Delphic oracles, in Herodotus' time is probable, and is supported, out of these Books, by the references to the oracles of Laios 4 and others.5 That Pythian utterances were less carefully treated seems improbable. In regard to their frequent occurrence in the Herodotean text, there is no necessity for one ruling and one only: in some cases Herodotus may have had recourse in person to the written source, in others he may have taken over the divine utterance with the human tradition, oral or written. Where the oracles are quoted in prose, where the scriptural verse has been obviously dissolved, there the intervention of a medium becomes additionally probable.

Indications in the text of Herodotus seem to suggest the hypothesis that he, or his authorities, may have had, among documentary sources, copies or abstracts of speeches delivered, or reported to have been delivered, upon certain occasions. Not, indeed, in the speeches inserted as such,1 which have sometimes very little the appearance of authenticity; but rather in certain stories, which appear to go back to speeches, at least for their raw material. The story of the Ionians on the Danube was told, in some shape or other, at the first trial of Miltiades, as we may infer with all but certainty.2 Herodotus expressly affirms that the stories of Marathon and of the taking of Lemnos were articles in the defence, on the second trial.3 It is self-evident that stories used for such purposes were not scrupulously accurate. It is not to be supposed that political or forensic argument, even in the pre-sophistic age, took the child-like form of a string of good stories,4 and speakers in Herodotus' pages can reason closely upon occasion 5; but there is no inconsequence in maintaining that Herodotus may have owed materials for his accounts of historic events, directly or indirectly, to such occasions. Important passages in the story of the Spartan war with Argos are directly traceable to the trial and defence of or even oral authority for every such case. Another class of cases appears somewhat more public and notorious (5. 49, 79 f., 91, 109, 130). Perhaps the class of examples most open to suspicion is that containing the longest set speeches ascribed to individual speakers named, e.g. the speech of Sokles, 5. 92; the speech of Leotychides, 6. 86 (ep. the Adγot cited 6. 43 = 3. 80 f.). Just for these it is most likely that Herodotus had written authority or materials.

Kleomenes, as recorded by Herodotus.1 A legal process led to the deposition of Demaratos, and the pleadings have probably left their mark on the traditions.2 To the prosecution of Phryniches might perhaps be traceable this or that item in the story of the Ionian revolt.3 The Alkmaionids had supplied occasion for more than one verdiet in Athenian history; and it is just possible that the version of the Kylonian sin (ayos) given by Herodotus 4 may have formed part of the defence on one or other of these occasions.5 It is not clear whether the Athenian ambassadors to Artaphrenes, who had 'medized' first of all free Greeks, were actually brought to trial or not 6; but in any case there were probably speeches in the Ekklesia on the subject, though it might be rash to assume that any documentary report of them has reached Herodotus. Acts of the Ekklesia at Athens, or of the corresponding bodies in other states, are recorded by Herodotus explicitly, and still more frequently implied, such as alliances, treaties, declarations of war, legislations, and so on; but whether he had written evidence in any of these cases is not obvious. Epigraphic evidence is more probable in such cases than official manuscript, and perhaps the source, so far as present in the text, is present in a diluted form, filtered through the medium of oral tradition or literary authority. The phraseology of Herodotus lends but slender support to the hypothesis of his having employed official documents to any considerable extent. We can hardly suppose him to have used the Royal Parchments,7 and the Ionian documents referred to by him may have been private documents, nor is there express mention of his using them. 8 He had hardly seen the king's despatch to Megabazos,9 or the papers of Histiaios.10 In any case the Persian wars doubtless made great havoc of such evidences in Athens and in Ionia; and in Sparta

b The Alkmaionid stories (6.125-130), which furnish a set-off to the (Philaid) version of the battle of Marathon, have rather the appearance of a poetic origin, and it seems unlikely that such an event as the wedding of Agatiste was uncelebrated in literature and song until Herodotus arose to commit the story to writing; certainly the completion of such documents are less likely to have been accessible or existent. It is not, therefore, to any great extent from such sources that Herodotus records state acts, though here again the direct indications in the text are probably an imperfect measure of the extent to which he had such evidences to employ.

To convert the restrictions above imposed upon the presence and importance of direct oral testimony or tradition, among the sources of these Herodotean Books, into an attack upon the authority and value of the work, would be a strange or perverted exercise of criticism. Here again methodical discrimination is, before all things, necessary. It is no doubt satisfactory to be as near as possible in time and place to the evidence of the senses, to be in direct contact with the eye-witness and the earwitness. We joyfully detach from the work of Herodotus any and every fragment which is, or may be, derived from the direct evidence of his own senses. But these grains of gold are of necessity, as has been shown,2 comparatively scanty. In regard to events they are, from the very nature of the subject, almost out of the question. For his historical materials, properly so called, Herodotus was of necessity dependent upon other men. In regard to the main subject of his last volume (Bks. 7, 8, 9), he was able to draw still to a very large extent upon the living voices of contemporaries. For the history of the world previous to Dareios this was less and less possible. The history of the generation contemporary with the reign of Kleomenes (c. 519-489 B.C.) in this, as in other respects, occupied an ambiguous position. But in any case, if Herodotus had scriptural evidence for his story, so much the better; for such evidence was nearer to the events. If he was not the first prose-writer to recount the story of the Ionian revolt, but was the first to attempt the reduction of the story of Marathon to writing, the hypothesis might help to explain why the earlier story is, in some respects, the better.

In regard to all those records in these three Books, which earry back the history before the date of the continuous story, the case for literary authorities is proportionately stronger. Other things being equal, the earlier the written evidence or tradition goes back the better. The case may seem, at first sight, to stand differently, in regard to all matters, for which Herodotus might ex hypothesi have had the direct evidence of his own senses. These matters fall, speaking broadly, into two categories: events, and facts of geographical, anthropological, or archaeological interest. For events during his own lifetime Herodotus must rank as a first-class witness, even if his knowledge of them was due as little to immediate observation as to documentary evidence. The other category may seem, at first sight, to stand on a wholly different footing. But even here further discrimination is desirable. Precise archaeological observations may be all the better guaranteed if based upon the writer's own senses 1; but with the mass of geographical and ethnological materials in these Books the case stands otherwise. There is nothing derogatory to the authority of these records, as preserved by Herodotus, in the supposition that they are based but to a small extent upon his own direct observation, and to a considerable extent upon other authorities. The weight of those authorities is not diminished, but augmented, by the further supposition that Herodotus is not preserving merely travellers' tales, commercial or temple traditions about foreign parts, but popularising, not perhaps altogether without recourse to the arts necessary to make such things acceptable to a wider public, a Periopsis of Libya, a Periplus of the Pontos, or other works of the great geographers of Miletos.2 In such works the digested results of generations of travellers and of natural philosophers were probably incorporated: Herodotus' own adventures might supply brilliancy or force to his descriptions, but could hardly have added much to the actual science of the best men of his day in these matters.

It is not within the scope of this Introduction to attempt minutely to determine the space filled by one or other of the various sources above enumerated in each chapter of these Books. Further light is incidentally to be shed on such questions by the succeeding sections, which state and discuss the further problems of the composition and contents of the work; and in the Notes and Appendices the principles here obtained are exhibited in application to the cases of special importance. But to attempt in a tabular form to determine the provenance of each passage or portion of the text would be to transgress all limits of probable agreement. The attempt, where made, is doomed to speedy wreckage, for want of sufficient evidence, of a decisive nature, internal to the text, and for want of external material to furnish comparisons. We are not, indeed, so completely bound to the personal authority of Herodotus as, for example, to the personal authority of Thucydides; for Herodotus does afford copious indications of the sources of his materials: but the indications are not sufficiently precise to supersede the personal authority of the writer, or to enable us to recover his materials throughout in the raw state. From the strictly scientific standpoint nothing less than such a result would be completely satisfactory; but such a result is beyond attainment. It is, however, worth while to carry the elucidation and evaluation of the sources to a point where a general agreement may still be obtainable, without going so far, in the way of speculative analysis and reconstruction, as to challenge opposition or scepticism at every further stage.

§ 21. The problem of the place or places, and date or dates, of the composition of the work is twofold. Questions touching the acquisition of the material in the first instance must be distinguished from questions touching its subsequent, or final, elaboration into the work as we have it. Probability and internal evidences are in favour of the hypothesis that the collection of materials by Herodotus was a work of many years, and conducted in many places. There is also something to be said for the hypothesis that the work in its present form is the result of a final and comparatively late redaction by the author himself, in which literary unity has been imposed upon or infused into traditions, testimonies, evidences, opinions, which were not all originally contemplated as forming parts of one and the same opus. If so much be admitted, nothing compels us to assume that

Dahlmann's work, Herodat. Ausseinem Bucke sein Lehen (Altona, 1824, Eng. tr. by G. V. Cox, London, 1845), was 'epoch-making' for the study of the question, and is still worth consulting. Rawlinson's first chapter (i. pp. 1-34, 1875), while admitting that 'the quantum of travel has indeed been generally exaggerated," still errs in the direction of exaggeration (pp. 8 ff.). Stein, even in his last edition of the work (vol. i. o 1883), sends Herodotus forth on Forschungsreisen in all den Ländern mit deren Beschreibung und Geschichte das Werk sich beschäftigt. The evidence for such journeys is purely internal; their greater extension depends upon a less critical interpretation.

the various sections, parts, Books, or component parts of Books, came into existence in the order which they now occupy in the work.1 We are free to argue that larger or smaller parts of the work, as we have it, were in the first instance projected, and to a greater or less extent composed and elaborated, as separable stories, before the author conceived and applied the great idea of fusing all into a continuous and highly artistic unity. Six such well-articulated groups, or systems, of traditions, or histories, can be easily detected in the work, even neglecting the masses of material concerned with, and presumably drawn in the first resort from, local Greek sources: (1) the traditions of the great invasion, as given in Bks. 7, 8, 9; (2) the Egyptian Logi, as presented in Bk. 2; (3) the Libyan Logi, and (4) the Scythian Logi, together forming the fourth Book; (5) the Persian Logi, which fill considerable parts of the first and third Books, and seem to supply, and ultimately to suggest, the framework and system for the work as a whole; lastly (6), the Lydian Logi, which furnish the bulk of the first part of the first Book.2 The final redaction or incorporation of these diverse and originally independent materials, in whatever condition of relative finish and completion, is approximately dated by the references to late and contemporary events, which are especially frequent in the second 3 and third triads of Books, and which point conclusively to the opening years of the Peloponnesian war as the time when Herodotus laid the last touches upon his work, though the idea of its complete structure and final form may have been conceived a good while sooner, and even more or less accomplished. A single passage, the con-

cluding words of the third Book, carries the latest revisory and unifying process back over the first volume or triad of Books. That process has indubitably made the secret history of the genesis and creation of the work, which stands before us as an almost perfect whole, difficult, perhaps impossible, to discover. But some theories are more probable or luciferous than others. It is here assumed that the first great section of the work of Herodotus, for which materials were acquired, and to which some degree of finality was given, was the story of the great invasion in Bks. 7, 8, 9,2 even though, in the present and perfect work, these Books are specially rich in references to the events of the Peloponnesian war. The date of the visit to Egypt may be fixed with approximate certainty to the period between 449-445 B.C., or at least between 454-443 B.C.3 That would be the date at which the bulk of the matter in the second Book was obtained, and its elaboration might have succeeded before the final revision during the period of Athenian supremacy, 460-455 E.C. His visit therefore falls between 455-443 s.c. (4) But from 455-449 n.c. Amyrtaeos maintained himself in the marshes, and fighting was going on; in 449 B.C. Pausiris was established by the Persians in succession to his father, 3. 15. Therefore the visit of Herodotus may be dated between 449-443 B.C. The conclusion thus reached would be voidable on the hypothesis that the notices combined were insertions on the final redaction of the work; but the combination numbered (3) is especially strong evidence, and the conclusion fits in remarkably well with external probabilities. The obvious parody on the opening of Herodotus in Aristoph. Acharn. 523-529 (425 B.C.) makes it more likely that this part of Hdt.'s work had been recently published, or was just then notorious, in Athens. Bauer's notion (Herodot's Biographie, 1878, pp. 4, 29), that the work of Herodotus was quickly antiquated, is hardly reconcilable with the reference(s) in Aristophanes, the elaborate, though veiled, polemic of Thucydides, the attack of Ktesias, the respect of Aristotle (including the 'Adnv. moderela), and the merits of the work itself.

¹ 3. 160. Cp. Rawlinson od l. (vol. ii. ³ p. 536). In the first three Books there are only some half dozen allusions to events later than 478 n.c. This circumstance may arise in part from the nature of the subject (cp. § 4 supra). In the three middle Books there are a dozen or so. In the three last Books about a score,

² This view was suggested, as far back as 1854, by Blakesley (see notes 1, 477 to Bk. 7) and endorsed by Rawlinson (iv. p. 1). A. Scholl, Philologus x. (1855) pp. 29 ff., also apparently originated it. A. Bauer, op. cit., has enforced it; and the arguments of §§ 4, 5 supra, seem to tell in its favour.

³ Hdt. visited Egypt (1) after 460 n.c., for he mentions the battle of Papremis 3. 12; (2) probably before 438 n.c., for in 2. 148 he mentions, as the greatest buildings of the Greeks, the temples of Ephesos and Samos; the Parthenon was finished in 438 n.c. This point is not conclusive, but accepting the tradition of his settlement at Thurii circa 448 n.c., this date may be taken as limit. (3) Hdt. visited Egypt during a period of Persian supremacy, between 460-443 n.c., and therefore not of the work. It is not unreasonable to suppose that the story of the revenge of Pheretime and some parts at least of the Libyan Logi were obtained in Egypt, but internal evidences in the second part of the fourth Book point also strongly to western sources and influences, as will appear below. The Scythian Logi have been brought into connexion with the significant expedition of Perikles in 444 B.C.1 A more plausible suggestion has never been made to account for the visit of Herodotus to Scythia, and his interest in the Scyths. The Persian and the Lydian Logic remain. It may seem a violent hypothesis to see in them materials gathered, or adapted, comparatively so late in the day. But there are several considerations which soften the violence. Some amount of material may have been in the hands of Herodotus before he left Halikarnassos for Samos, or Samos for Athens, or Athens for the west. The material in the Books here in question (1-3) is not by any means indubitably drawn from sources accessible only or mainly in Asia: (a) there is considerable room for literary sources which Herodotus might have had with him. (b) The Lydian Logi are saturated with Delphic authority; it is hardly conceivable that Herodotus wrote the first part of the first Book before visiting Delphi. (c) Western sources are visible in the first volume, notably in the story of Demokedes;2 and Kirchhoff, even Kirchhoff, was not strictly accurate when he wrote that in the first three Books (or 1-3, 117) there is no trace of Herodotus' residence and journeys in Magna Graecia and Sicily;3 but the slight correction necessary only leaves the conclusion of Kirchhoff the more unassailable, viz. that the redaction of these Books was only undertaken when Herodotus' travels were all but concluded. Assuming, as has here been assumed, that the last three Books were the first substantial portion of the work projected, and worked out (subject to the modifications subsequently introduced, on the final incorporation and revision of the whole), the other six Books of Herodotus are virtually a proem not demonstrable traces in the portion delimited by Kirchhoff, but 1. 23 f., 94, 145, 166 f. may count for something; while if we add the remainder of Bk. 3 the story of Demokedes, as Kirchhoff himself, of course, fully recognises, is almost inconceivable except as a western story. Cp. p. xxxv. sn ra

^{3 &}quot;Von seinem Aufenthalte und seinen Reisen in Unteritalien und Sieilien findet sich in diesen Büchern noch keine Spur," Entstehungszeit², p. 7. There are to the story of the great invasion, composed out of several more or less independent parts, of which the second Book is the most obvious, while the fourth Book contains two other parts, only one degree less obvious; but, whether any of these parts ever actually existed independently, much more was promulgated before others, are questions which the internal evidence will never decide authoritatively: for Herodotus' object never was to write his own life, or the history of his travels, or of his work; and his final revision of the work has given it such a substantial unity that the decisive traces of its genesis are almost hopelessly obscured. Thus, for example, the reference in the second volume to criticisms on a passage in the first can never be made to prove that the passage in the first volume was written and published before the passage in the second, for two reasons: (1) the passage in the first volume itself replies to such criticisms, and proves that the story told by Herodotus was adversely criticised, and that he defended it, either in the first instance, or in the last revision; (2) even if the passage in Bk. 6 be taken as a reference expressly to the passage in Bk. 3 it would only prove that the second passage was written after the first, and not that the first had been published and circulated previously. To encounter incredulity, it would have been enough for Herodotus to have told the story, or to have read the story aloud, as he might have done at Thurii as well as at Athens, If, however, as is equally possible, the assertion in Bk. 3 is directed against critics, not of the story as told by him, but of the story as found by him, itself perhaps already a more or less notorious story, then the critics to whom he replies in Bk. 6 may be critics not of the story as told by him in Bk. 3 but simply of the story; and against their incredulity the passage in Bk. 3 already contains a protest.

It remains to review certain passages in these Books which point to solutions of the question regarding the time and place, or times and places, in which Herodotus amassed and arranged the materials which form the contents of this his second volume, so to speak. These Books contain, expressly and explicitly, evidence that Herodotus visited Thasos, Kyzikos and Prokonnesos, Thebes,

Zakynthos,¹ Metapontion.² Such fixed points involve many others intermediate. It may here be taken for granted that Herodotus had visited Samos, Delos, Sparta, Delphi, Athens; and the general character of the traditions in these Books fully bears out these assumptions, which are also supported by particular points or phrases in regard to those places.³ It is not so easy to carry Herodotus in person to Marathon,⁴ or to extend his travels in Peloponnese to Sikyon⁵ and Argos.⁶ It is not easy to make out much of a case for his autopsy in Asia Minor,ⁿ and only an uncritical use of his terminology can carry him into Bactria,⁶ to Ampe,⁰ or to Arderikka.¹⁰ If it is to be admitted that he may have been in Kypros, and at Amathus, it is not on the strength of the phrase $\mu \acute{e} \gamma \rho \iota \acute{e} \mu \acute{e} \nu \acute{e} \iota$ in the fifth Book.¹¹

But in regard to the stories and descriptions in these Books, the main problems, under this head, resolve themselves into the question of the extent of Herodotus' travels in the Pontos, in Libya, and in the west.

The Pontos.—Passages already quoted, just above, guarantee visits to Thasos, the 'Hellespont,' 12 as, en route, towns on the Propontis, to which may be added with confidence Byzantion. 13 How far Herodotus' excursions inland into Thrace extended can hardly be made out. No critical reader will cite the inscription of the Tearos, 14 or the description of the Lake-dwellings, 15 as evidence in this connexion; nor argue from the course of the Danube, 16 or the geography or ethnography of the Thracians, 17 that Herodotus had ever penetrated beyond the coast. A casual phrase on Thracian ritual 18 carries a stronger suggestion of autopsy without determining its area. Nor will any critical reader argue from the descriptions and measurements of the Pontos, and adjacent waters, 19 that Herodotus had in person traversed the length and breadth of the Euxine, or ever set eyes upon the sea of Azof. The heart of the problem is reached when the point arises, whether Herodotus ever gat him farther than Byzantion? There is but one passage in the fourth Book, and not any elsewhere, which is at all difficult to explain on the supposition that Herodotus stayed his voyage at Byzantion. The description of Exampaios, and of the krater there, might seem hardly consistent with candour and honesty, if Herodotus had not at least been as far as Borysthenes (Olbia). The indication of the site of Olbia, or Borysthenes, would suit autopsy, but is not inconsistent with an oral or written source.2 The supposition that he reached Olbia, however, once granted fits in so well with the character of much of the Scythian Legi, especially the parts descriptive of the land, rivers, manners and customs of the people, that it can hardly be resisted. No one, however, will carry Herodotus beyond the Tanais on the strength of the ruins he reports as extant in his own day,3 much less to the city of Gelonos even though he corrects 'Hellenes' for an error in regard to its inhabitants; 4 albeit the misdescription of the Crimea is not conclusive proof that he never sighted its shores, but proves at most that he did not approach it on the land side. The attempt to construct a map of any country, or district, by simple autopsy is one of the grossest fallacies of inspection that can be perpetrated; but it is more likely to be committed by an actual visitor than by a mere literateur. Neither the description of the Emporion of the Borysthenites as the middle of the Scythian coast⁶ nor the references to other natural or artificial objects 7 can prove much; but bearing in mind the obvious principle that Herodotus is sentations of Seyths with cups at their girdles (c. 10), or have met Seyths elsewhere than in Seythia proper. Those who think Herodotus must have gone to Seythia to see snow (c. 31, cp. 50) may infer from his account of the climate (c. 28) that he spent a whole year in the land. The native pottery (c. 61) has a flavour of autopsy about it; but pottery is portable. Tymnes (c. 76) may have met Hdt, in Olbia or elsewhere. The Kimmerian remains (cc. 11, 12) are no more conclusive than the forts of Darcios (c. 124). The same canon applies to other geographical and ethnographical details.

not writing a book of travels but a work on history and geography, it is reasonable to conclude in this region that the absolutely convincing evidences, if taken alone and interpreted strictly, would lead to an under-estimate of the range of his personal observations, and that a margin should be allowed over and above the bare necessities of the case: though in regard to the breadth of that margin an exact agreement is hardly to be expected.

Libya.—The difficulty of establishing a visit by Herodotus to Kyrene, or any travel in Libya, is very great. The citation of Libyans, of Kyrenaeans, of Carthaginians, certainly does not The clearest proof that Herodotus had in person conversed with men of Kyrene is supplied by a passage in the second Book, but there is nothing in the passage to suggest that the scene of the interview was Kyrene: the context would rather suggest Egypt. If another passage in the second Book, which has been relied upon to prove a visit to Kyrene, is conclusive, then the passage in the fourth Book, describing the forts on the Oaros, may also be held to prove autopsy, or a passage in the sixth Book 7 to prove a visit to Arderikka and the Eretrians. The comparison between the size of Plataea and Kyrene⁸ may suggest that Herodotus had not seen the island, but cannot prove that he had seen the city. The hint of the elevation of the Kyrenaean plateau is suggestive of vision: but the statement might be based on hearsay, as the passage which follows on the eight months' harvest of Kyrene most probably is, unless we are prepared to keep Herodotus nearly a year in the place. The descriptions of Aziris, 10 and of Kinyps," are graphic, but cannot prove more than that Herodotus has lively sources to follow. The localisation of the Silphium cultivation 12 no more proves autopsy than the mention of the weasels which infest it closely resembling those of Tartessos:13 such creatures Herodotus might have seen without going to Spain or Libya. If the general account of Kyrene and the adjoining regions is relied upon as furnishing proof that Herodotus visited Kyrene,1 it must be remembered, on the other hand, that the general account is what Herodotus might most easily have obtained at second hand, and that in some respects the general account is misleading, or distorted. Thus, it is generally admitted,2 that the description of the Zones applies less accurately to the eastern part of Libya (which would be familiar in Kyrene), than to the western part (which would be known in Carthage, or from Carthaginian sources). It is practically beyond doubt that Herodotus cannot have visited the Oases which he describes with complete confidence, for he makes them hills instead of hollows, and he blunders at the start to a matter of some 400 miles.3 The account of the parathalassic Libyans begins from Egypt; the tribes are not based or centred on Kyrene, as is the case with the Seythian tribes in relation to Olbia. It might from this contrast be argued that for the Libyan ethnography Herodotus is not even following a Kyrenaean source. regard to the historical portion of the second part of the fourth Book no one will maintain that Herodotus must have gone to Kyrene to acquire any part or elements in it.5 In regard to the geography, however, a different impression prevails. Even assuming that, for the Libyan geography, Herodotus had no scriptural source—a large assumption—enough allowance has not been made for some other possibilities. A good deal was known of Libya in Thera, in Samos, in Delphi: but still more in Egypt, and not a little, we may conjecture, in Sicily and Magna Graecia. The presence of the Egyptian (Helleno-Egyptian) sources seem specially strong in the account of the coast, in the account of Libyan tribes, between Egypt and the Syrtes, and in the account of the Oases. The presence of the western sources may fairly be suspected in the account of the Zones and in such passages as are ascribed to Carthaginian authority. The story of Dorieus, the adventures of Philip,6 suggest channels along which information reached Sicily and the West. The southward connexion between the western Greeks and Africa has perhaps not been sufficiently taken into account. The well-ascertained route from Tripoli inland was probably known to Sikeliots.\(^1\) It might even be suspected that the artificial African honey, or sugar,\(^2\) came across to compete with the genuine Hyblaean product in the home-market. The correspondences between the Egyptian and Libyan \(Lopi^3 \) suggest a large community of origin. The obvious evidences in the fourth Book, and throughout the second volume, of Herodotus' migration to the west before the materials of the fourth Book were brought into their present form, give ample room for additions from western sources. In any case, if Herodotus ever set foot in Kyrene, it would probably have been in connexion with his voyage to and from Egypt.

The West.—It is not merely the Libyan Logi which betray the influence of western sources, and therefore support the view that the western migration of Herodotus was an important factor in the composition of his work, and in particular of this second volume of his work. His knowledge and opinions of Europe and European matters, outside Hellas, are apparently affected by his visit to the west. The dominant instance is the comparison between Attica and the Iapygian promontory: but it may fairly be considered that the unique reference to Massalia, if not the mention of the Veneti,6 is attributable to contact with western information. It may also fairly be asked whether the statements and theory of Herodotus respecting the Danube 7 are not coloured by western information, startling as it may be to find the Danube, in his pages, pursuing a course which silently intersects the actual course of the Rhone. It is, however, in the narrative portions of the fifth and sixth Books that the western sources flow most freely. The story of Dorieus, as told by Herodotus, is almost inconceivable except as due in part to local authorities. The same remark applies with equal force to the account of the Sumian adventurers at Zankle, and to the note on Dionysios. 10 If the appearance of Smindyrides of Sybaris, with the intercalated note on the acme of Sybaris, and of Damasos son of Amyris the sage of Siris, among the suitors of Agariste,1 need not be explained as a compliment to the émigré historian's new surroundings, vet the citation of the Sybarites who occupied Laos and Skidros. after the destruction of their own city,2 has an almost unmistakable ring of local knowledge in it. The whole evidence verificatory of Herodotus' acquaintance with western sources at first hand is, of course, not confined to the three Books here considered; and such stories as the tale of Demokedes,3 or the account of the battle of Himera, supply important evidences in this connexion. But it is the fourth Book, significantly enough, which contains the irrefragable evidence of an actual movement by the historian in person to the west, in the proof of his presence in Zakynthos,5 and in Metapontion,6 and in the implicit appeal to a western audience by the introduction of the Iapygian promontory as a natural feature better known than the Attic Sunion.7 And the distribution of the Italo-Sikeliote influence and materials over all three volumes of his work, points strongly to the conclusion that Herodotus gave the work its final form and unity in the comparative retirement and detachment of his western home. Internal evidences hardly justify the attempt to trace more minutely his movements on Italiote, or on Sikeliote ground.

Whether Herodotus ever revisited Athens, after his traditional settlement at Thurii, there is no clear evidence to show. No other hypothesis, however, so well explains the presence, the presumable insertion, of the numerous references to events in the early years of the Peloponnesian war. The chief bar to the theory—apart from the absence of positive testimony—is raised by the conflict between the testimony of Thucydides and the testimony of Herodotus concerning the shaking of Delos. According to Herodotus there was a unique earthquake there just after the invasion of 490 n.c.⁵ According to Thucydides there was a unique earthquake there just before the outbreak of war in 431 n.c.⁵ The two statements are irreconcilable. The contradiction has to be explained. It seems most improbable that, if there had been an earthquake in 431 B.C. and if Herodotus had been in Athens then, or shortly afterwards, he should not have heard of it; or hearing of it, should have left his statement uncorrected. Even bringing the dute of Herodotus' last revision down to 425/4 B.C.—a date so late as to be hardly tolerable—the supposition is inadmissible that an earthquake in 431 B.C. had been thrown back sixty years, and relegated to the region of ancient history to please an interested visitor. The first alternative is to suppose Thucydides in the If there were two earthquakes, Herodotus has not heard of the one in 431 B.C. Thucydides has, wittingly or unwittingly, denied the other. If there was only one earthquake, Herodotus is in the right, Thucydides in the wrong. How the error in Thucydides is to be explained is another question; but it must be remembered that Thucydides was at work on his history at least twenty-eight years, and possibly thirty years or more, after the alleged earthquake of 431 B.C., and that there is nothing to show at what time he was informed of the earthquake, or inserted the information in his work. Without any insinuation of mala fides against Thucydides, it is just conceivable that, before he wrote the passage in question, the earthquake of 490 B.C. had been carried down to do duty in connexion with the Peloponnesian war. That hypothesis is less violent than the alternative that an earthquake in 431 B.C. had been antedated forthwith sixty years. It is to be feared that the vigilance of Thucydides somewhat relaxed when he had to deal with allegations which tended to magnify his own proper subject.2 No critic is bound to exalt the authority of Thucydides at the expense of Herodotus, least of all on a point where the later historian has an interest adverse to the credit of the earlier. One other conceivability should be faced, Both historians may be in error to this extent, that there had been no earthquake at all, either in 490 B.C. or in 431 B.C. Earthquakes unfortunately cannot be verified like eclipses. invention at Delos is not impossible. A fiction might be more easily a movable or multiple point. Of all these possibilities

the least probable is surely the transfer to 490 p.c. of an earth-quake belonging to 431 p.c. There is therefore nothing in the situation to bar effectively a visit by Herodotus to Athens after 431 p.c. The mention of the Propylaca¹ favours the supposition. Later than 425 p.c. it cannot be brought, even by pressing the evidence.² Further speculation were easy but idle.³

§ 22. Upon the materials which reached him one way or another, at various times and various places, the mind of Herodotus seems to have exercised a two-fold action, for the one part critical and selective, for the other presentative and creative. A very large part of the text of Herodotus is occupied with the express statement and exposition of his own opinions, views, judgments, while indirectly and inferentially this element is largely reinforced by his methods of historiography. The presence of a large reflective element, as distinguished from strictly descriptive and strictly narrative elements, in the text is, indeed, more obvious than the extent to which the reflective element is to be ascribed to the proper action of the historian's own mind. Certain opinions, judgments and afterthoughts are so closely implicated in the historic matter reported, and are so highly characteristic of popular modes of Greek thought, that they may have come to Herodotus ready-made, in tradition, or in his scriptural sources. Even his own most conscious essays in the philosophy of life and history are hardly original creations, but rather exhibit the precision and application of certain ethical and theologic ideas, constantly present in Greek literature, from Homer and Hesiod to Aischylos and Pindar. But what he found ready to his hand, Herodotus made his own by adoption; and so far as the estimate of the historian's mind, methods, and authority is concerned, the distinction between his own judgment, reason and understanding of the matters recorded in his work, and the Gorgias in 427 n.c.—of which there is absolutely no evidence; whether Herodotus died of the plague from which Thucydides recevered, and so on. Once for all, Herodotus did not attempt to write an autobiography, and the independent evidences are scanty, late and untrustworthy (cp. Bauer, Herodot's Everyaphie, 1878).

² Artaxerxes is not for certain dead in 6. 98 (cp. notes ad L.), and the death of Zopyros has been plausibly dated 428 or 427 n.c. (cp. Ktesias, ed. Gilmore, p. 165), so that his desertion to Athens (3. 160) might fall some time earlier.

As, for example, whether Herodotus survived Perikles (ep. 6, 131); whether Herodotus came back to Athens with judgment of others, his contemporaries and predecessors, is mainly important where he obviously records an opinion or theory in order to express his own dissent therefrom; or emphasises the expression of his own opinion in such a way as to imply that it is more or less peculiar and original. It is, indeed, evident that Herodotus was very far from believing everything that he had heard and read. The conflict of evidence and opinion, natural to a multitude and variety of sources, forced upon him a certain degree of criticism, and even an uncontradicted report was not acceptable to him if it conflicted with his general conceptions of probability. It is easily intelligible that critical expressions of dissent, or disbelief, should be most frequent in regard to natural as distinguished from historical facts, or at least in regard to facts involving directly the appeal to natural probability.\(^1\) It is rarely that a purely historical statement is reported and discredited by Herodotus as false or calumnious.2 In general the historical doubt is exhibited by the conflict of authorities, the exhibition at least implying that Herodotus had not definitely made up his mind in favour of one or other.3 For the rest, where a statement is given without express comment, or with only so much criticism as is implied in the citation of an authority, it must be taken as the version of facts, or of affairs, adopted by Herodotus, and as the expression, so far, of his own understanding. It is important to observe that Herodotus, though plainly implying the distinction between the credible and the incredible, the probable and the improbable, the uncertain and the certain, does not base the said differences on differences in his sources of information, or on distinctions between observation and inference, inference and testimony. Such differences and distinctions are implied in his formulae, but they are not made the basis of a scale of probabilities. Herodotus has plainly some ideal of knowledge and historic certainty; but the truth, as he conceives it, may be obtained by various ways from various sources in various degrees. Knowledge is not with him different in kind from opinion, and certainty is equally attainable by testimony, by the evidence of his own eyes, by inference and combinations. He knows, by his own inferential conjecture, that Aristeas appeared in Metapontion 240 years after his final disappearance in Kyzikos.1 He has no knowledge of any man of erudition, except Anacharsis, who has ever arisen among the Scythians.2 He has an absolute certainty in regard to the Hellenism of the Macedonian royal house,3 which he offers to demonstrate, and he subsequently fulfils the promise by a transparently pragmatic legend.4 But he does not always accept a family's history at its own valuation; for he corrects the Gephyraean tradition in the light of his own personal investigations.5 He has personal knowledge of the employment of wheat by Thracian bacchanals, but whether such knowledge is based upon the evidence of sight,7 or of hearsay,8 his formulac do not in themselves enable us to determine.

The canon that Herodotus does not, as a rule, draw a hard and fast distinction between hearsay and autopsy, autopsy and inference, avoids the error of arguing, from the standing formula $\tau \hat{\omega} \nu$ imeîs $\tilde{\iota} \delta \mu \epsilon \nu$, the presence of anything more than a tradition, or an inference. In some cases, indeed, the phrase occurs in regard to matters which might have come actually under the writer's own observation; 10 but in others such a possibility is excluded by the reference to a particular event in the past. 11 The turn of the formula in itself tends to reduce it to a mere form, implying very little deliberate limitation. When Herodotus wishes to mark the limits of knowledge, whether personal or general, he has more explicit methods.\(^1\) The occurrence of such formulae, whether conventional or charged with a personal significance, goes some way towards constituting Herodotus, for us, the father of criticism, as he is the father of history. Such a title, however, cannot be construed into the statement that he was the only, or even the best, critic of his time; in this, as in some other respects, he was probably rather behind than ahead of some contemporaries. It is a happy accident that his work remains to represent much that has perished of better and of worse.

Even larger than the space filled by express statements of disbelief, doubt, or conflicting opinions in the text, is the room assigned to expressions of constructive personal opinion, directly or indirectly at variance with tradition, or with rival hypotheses. Here again, from the nature of the case, the most obvious examples concern natural facts, as distinguished from historic events or occurrences, but examples of inference or theory, in regard to the latter class of facts, are not infrequent. Herodotus has his own theory to account for the absence of floods in the Danube.2 the relation between climate and inhabitants,3 the relation between climate and growth,4 the great superiority of Europe to Asia and Libya in size,5 and of Europe and Asia to Libya in fertility.6 Herodotus passes more distinctly into the region of historic theory, or construction, when he expresses an opinion that the Hellenes learnt the art of writing from the Phoenicians,7 that Egyptian armour was used in the Libyan ritual before Greek,8 that the Allelu-cry was invented in Libya,9 that Salmoxis lived long before Pythagoras, 10 that the men of Thera and Kyrene were mistaken in reporting that their founder's name was Battos.11 Herodotus allows himself some liberty in the ascription of motives for historical acts,¹ or possibilities,² but the express motivation of actions or explanations of conduct is so seldom qualified by any formula, that the introduction of a formula rather seems to suggest alternative theories, or accounts of the action. In general Herodotus assigns, or reports, motives for personal conduct without apparent misgiving.³ Such motivation may have been taken over from his sources, or may be an inference of his own, so obvious, perhaps, as to seem almost self-evident. But the judgments implied are not always indisputable, or even adequate.

The motivation of action in such cases may, or may not, be as historically true as it is psychologically natural. In some cases, indeed, the anecdotal or biographical details present improbabilities or inconsistencies more or less considerable; and it would be too much to say that the action of individuals, when explained by Herodotus, is always explained in a satisfactory or convincing manner. There may not be an absolute contradiction between the motives and objects for the Scythian expedition as stated in the opening of the fourth Book, and the account given in the third; but there is a discrepancy sufficient to justify the hypothesis that the two passages belong to different cycles, or sources, of tradition, or that one of them is a tradition or anecdote, which Herodotus would not forego, while the other is his own more rationalised explanation. The contrast between the incorruptibility of Kleomenes, in his interview with Maiandrios, and his facility in yielding towards Aristagoras, might be explained by a degeneracy in his character, or by a superiority in the arts of the Milesian adventurer over those of the Samian; but the simpler explanation is found in assigning the anecdotes to different sources, and in detecting the 'pragmatic' character of the second: though it is significant of Herodotus' methods that he should seem wholly unconscious of the difficulty. Of course the madness of Kleomenes would account for almost anything related of him; but the madness itself has still to be proved.2 The motive for the exile of Theras from Sparta might have been taken from the story of Dorieus, or of Demaratos; but the verisimilitude of the psychological motivation is in this case probably a substitute for historical truth.3 The contrast between the aged and wise Amyntas and the inexperienced and youthful Alexander4 adequately accounts for the difference in the action ascribed to them, but cannot guarantee the historic reality of the story of the young men in women's clothes. In short, it is very seldom, if ever, that individual conduct is explained by Herodotus in a way which is unnatural, or psychologically untrue; but it is not seldom that the explanation he gives is unsatisfactory, at least where he is dealing with political characters and with actions of historic importance. The materials for correcting or completing his rationale of affairs are not seldom supplied by himself, but they are apparently supplied, to a large extent, unconsciously. Thus, in accounting for the different reception accorded to Aristagoras in Sparta and in Athens, Herodotus betrays an exemplary want of political circumspection; but his own text, in its narrative of events, supplies us with full materials for the correction of the error.⁵ His ascription of motives to Kleisthenes the Athenian reformer seems prejudiced and superficial; it requires at least to be translated into more political language before it is rendered acceptable. It is difficult to understand how an author could have written the defence of the Alkmaionidae, in oblivion of the alliances with Peisistratos, which he elsewhere records, and with Kleisthenes of Sikyon, which he immediately relates.

Thus, a modern critic may fairly be tempted to charge Herodotus himself with a failure of political insight, remarkable in a contemporary of Perikles and Thucydides, to say nothing of the Comedians; and to ascribe the profounder glimpses of policy and political causation, which traverse or illuminate his pages, either to a better source, or group of sources, or to the irresistible logic of facts honestly narrated, and recoverable or replaceable in chronological order. The natural and profound identity of interest between the Mede and the local despotisms in the Greek states could not anywhere be more conspicuously and convincingly displayed than in the pages of Herodotus;2 but he makes himself doubly responsible for the story—which no apologetic attempts can effectively save-of the proposed institution of democracy in Persia in the year 521 B.C.3 It is difficult to understand how the author, who penned the praise of democracy in the fifth Book,4 should have committed himself to the amazingly superficial judgment involved in his comments on the Atheno-Ionian alliance a few pages later;5 unless we catch echoes, in the one passage, of an Athenian judgment, in the other, of a Laconian jest. The verdict upon the strength and weakness of the Thracian folk $(\tilde{\epsilon}\theta\nu\sigma_s)$ is one of the most pregnant in the pages of Herodotus, and he expressly claims it for his own;6 and the general cause of migrations is detected amid a medley of fabulous traditions.7 Two other passages, in which the selfish, yet shrewd, policy of Sparta is placed in an unusually clear light, exhibit a political penetration which goes beyond the normal standard of Herodotus' own rationale of affairs, the account of the proposed restoration of Hippias,8 and the account of the refusal of the Plataean alliance.9

These cases suggest an Athenian Machiavelli in the background. In other instances Herodotus seems to have fallen a victim to local sources, concerned to give an explanation, other than political, for political actions. The expulsion of the Peisistratids by the Spartans was due purely to religious piety—as we may suppose Spartans themselves, or philo-Laconians at Athens, to have averred. The Athenian expedition to Paros—for which it is not difficult to find good reasons in policy and strategy—is ascribed by Herodotus, or his sources, to motives of mere personal revenge in the commander, and mere avarice in the citizens.2 The Eretrians went to Miletos to repay an old benefit—as Eretrians themselves were, perhaps, careful to record.3 That the friendship of Corinth for Athens was dictated, or affected, by commercial motives, it does not become Herodotus, or his sources, to suggest.4 This superficiality in the rationale of action is the more remarkable, inasmuch as Herodotus knew well enough that the real and the apparent reasons do not always coincide in political affairs.5 But this knowledge is but rarely applied by him to the explanation of human action, and upon the whole it is evident that his own conscious explanation of public actions fell far short of the policy and statecraft of the ages which he describes and represents.

The indifference shown by Herodotus, in his rationale of human conduct, whether in peoples or in individuals, for the merely utilitarian motives may be traced, at least in part, to two principles:

i. Herodotus loves a good story, and writes for lovers of good stories, for the many rather than the few: he was a logograph, not a sophist, and took Homer rather than Anaxagoras for his master. Science and philosophy are abstract, and eliminate details essential to good story-telling. There may, indeed, be more truth in well-told stories than in half the systems of philosophy, but it is a truth, so to speak, held in solution, and unrelated to other truths. Its charm lies in its indefiniteness: it is not in a teachable form. It gives delight but not instruction. It preserves the memory of men and deeds; but it carries no advice, and formulates no maxim. It rests in the simple and immediate intuition that anything and everything which men and women do or suffer is interesting to their fellows. This naïve yet noble sense of humanity was the first instinct of representation for Herodotus, and leaves him for the most part free to take the past at its own valuation.¹

ii. It is not inconsistent with this observation to admit that the characteristic defects of Herodotus, from the point of view of the scientific or philosophic historian, are also due, in part, to his preference for a particular theory, a certain rationale of events and affairs. Herodotus too often and too easily has recourse to the supernatural for the reason, cause, or explanation of the doings and sufferings of men. Not that the regions of the natural and of the supernatural were divided, or disintegrated, in the time and thought of Herodotus, and of those for whom in the first instance he was writing. But the very indefiniteness of the frontiers between the human and the superhuman, as conceived by Greeks five centuries before Christ, opened the door, on the smallest provocation, to the deus ex machina, to the special and direct intervention of the superhuman agent. A comparison between the stories of Herodotus and the stories of Homer, from this point of view, exhibits a difference of degree rather than a difference of kind. In two respects there is a development observable in passing from the Epos to the Logos: (1) Direct intervention of gods is not, indeed, absent from the pages of Herodotus, even when he is recording events of yesterday; 2 but in general the gods are farther withdrawn, nor does the historian

so to speak, 'without prejudice.' If he records a flagrant myth, or harmony of myths, in regard to the paternity of Athene (4. 180, ep. 188), it is plainly not that he believes it. His scepticism in regard to the inspiration of Aristeas (φοιβόλαμπτος, 4. 13) may be due to the higher faith: a similar influence may be traced in the practice, almost invariable with him, of making the Pythia, rather than the god, technically responsible for the oracular response. Even the Euhemerism, before Euhemeros, which appears in his pages, is evidence of the tendency to remove the genuine gods farther from the immediate sphere of mortality.

Aristeas, 4. 15, is not identified by Herodotus with Apollo, and the historian appears to have some doubt as to the epiphany of the god in Metapontion. The apparition of Triton, 4. 179, is ancient history.

pretend to reveal them in their Olympian or celestial home.\(1) Corresponding to this change there is a double development. (a) On the one hand what may be called the secondary causes, agencies, or channels of divine revelation and will, play, positively and relatively, a larger part in the narrative.\(2\) (b) On the other hand the unity, the continuity, and the ubiquity of the supernatural agency, are presented under more abstract, less personal and less frankly polytheistic formulae.\(3\)

Though Damia and Auxesia, 5. 82, are still gods in the eyes of Herodotus (Târ Ceâr Toutlar c. 88), he quietly accepts the process which has dethroned Arge and Opis (4. 33-35), Aristeas (4. 16), Adrastes (5. 67); the identification of the Tauric Virgin with Iphigeneia (4. 103) finds less favour in his eyes, and he applies, with considerable misgiving, on his own account the same process to the divinity of Salmoxis (4. 96).

1 The actual habitation of the gods is a problem upon which Herodotus can scarcely be cross-examined. Sokles turns the world upside down without reference to the question (5. 92 ad init.). The symbolical act and prayer of Dareios (5. 105) in no way commits Herodotus, His account of a performance of the Getae (πρός βροντήν τε καλ άστραπήν τυξεύοντες άνω πρός τον ούρανον άπειλέουσι τῷ θεῷ, 4. 94) points more clearly to an assumption, and a hint of the same assumption is involved in his report of the disaster to the palace of Skyles (¿s ταύτην ο θεύς ενέσκηψε βέλος, 4. 79). Even if such phrases came to Herodotus, ready made in his sources, his adoption of them would justify inference to his own opinions: but the materials are

3 Herodotus was a polytheist. would, of course, be an ignoratio elenchi to cite passages which simply illustrate the common Greek polytheism, without dissent on the historian's part, as such passages might all claim privilege; but certainly the onus probandi lies with those who consider Herodotus to have been emancipated from the average theology of his time and folk. In speeches, the polytheistic formulae might be regarded as dramatically approprinte: e.g. θεών τά ίσα νεμώντων 6. 11, 109; Deviol Te Kal Zuid por elobres xapir. 4. 136; πρός θεων των Ελληνίων 5. 19: ep. 92 ad fin., 93. (In 5. 106 a monotheistic formula might have been more appropriate.) In a large number of cases a monotheistic, or 'kathenotheistic' expression occurs, but can nearly always be reduced to a particular denomination : thus ò Beds in 4. 157; 5. 67; 5. 79 (es Debr), SO, plainly means Apollo; in 6.53 Zeus. In 5. 03 (τὰ τοῦ θεοῦ πρεσβύτερα έποιεύντο ή τὰ τῶν ἀνδρῶν), Apollo is almost certainly meant; the reference in the following passages may not be so indisputable: 4. 79 (ὁ θεδε ἐνέσκηψε βέλος), Zeus † 5. 1 (χρήσαντος τοῦ θεου) Dionysos † 6. 98 (τέρας ἔφαινε ὁ θεδε) Apollo? In 6. 27 (ταθτα μέν σφι σημήια ό θεδς προέδεξε) Herodotus comes nearer to a monotheistic formula than anywhere else, perhaps, in these Books. τδ άδυτον της θεού, 5. 72, may be taken to imply the deity of Athene; τὸ τέμενος τῶν θεῶν, 6. 75, that of Demeter and Persephone; Tip Ochv. 6. 61, that of

If dreams, omens, oracles, and other works of divination1 play a large part in the narrative of Herodotus, belief in them played a large part in the actual life and action which he depicts. Still we are bound to remember that some of his contemporaries were looking for natural causality, where others saw more or less direct intervention of the superhuman will, or wills; and that Herodotus in his attitude on this matter represents rather the popular than the critical spirit of his age. This reaction, or survival, in his mind seems to leave him satisfied with the more edifying version of many events and acts where a more scientific one might have been forthcoming, or to lead him even to prefer a story, or a version of affairs, which introduces the miraculous or supernormal element, even if it be in the humble form of an undesigned coincidence.2 If from one point of view the result presents to us a more lively and instructive picture of the mind and morale of Hellas in the historian's own day, still, on the

Helene; ίρδυ έπιχωρίης θεοῦ Κυβήβης, 5. 102, that of the goldess named: and even if such passages were written 'without prejudice,' what could be said of 6. 91! Speeches, again, may be dramatic (cp. 1. 119, Osor xporor o Beds παρεδίδου . . έπει σφεας ώντος θεός έγειρει κτλ. G. SG ή δὲ Πιθίη έφη το πειρηθήναι τοῦ θεοῦ καὶ τὸ ποιῆσαι lσον δίνασθαι. Cp. 6. 35, 82, 98, 80); but Herodotus, speaking propria persona, lays down the rule of moderate vengeance πρός θεών, 4. 205, and seems to pass a censure on the monotheistic Getne, oidéra allor Dedr roulforres elvat el μή τον αφέτερον, 4. 94. Moreover, such a passage as the correlative lists of Greek and Seythian divinities, 4. 59, goes far to commit Herolotus to the current polytheism of his age. Whether he endorsed the 'Scythie' criticism on a detail of Hellenie religion, 4. 79, does not appear: nor can we determine the relations in which he conceived various deities, or divine personifications of one and the same deity, to have stood to one another (cp. 4. 181, 203; 5. 46, 105, 119: 6. 53, 56, etc.): nor is there much evidence, in these Books, of any effort on the part of Herodotus to carry on the theologic process which he ascribes to Homer and Hesiod, 2. 53. On the other hand, signs are not wanting that the tendency towards a more abstract and monistic conception of supernatural actions and providences had affected the sources, and the mind, of the historian : to this tendency may be traced the fatalistic formula olew et sim., 4. 79; 5. 33, 92 y; 6. 64, 135; the divinisation of Chance, 4. 8, etc.; the divine µoipa, 4. 164; the fatal μισθός, 4. 166; the appointed days, 5. 93, cp. 6. 86-for, though such formulae are easily reconcilable with theism or with polytheism, they still tend towards the elimination of caprice, free-will, and special interventions. The same remark holds good of any philosophy of history, however crude: see further, the text above following whole, it can hardly be contended that the professed history recorded by Herodotus has not suffered by the idola fori, which intrude upon it at every turn. The result may be all equally historical to us; but the history is not exactly the history as the writer himself conceived it.

(2) The above argument is not substantially modified when we turn from the particular and secondary manifestations of the divine purpose, and causality, to the metaphysical and ethical design underlying or pervading the world of human history, as conceived by Herodotus. To Herodotus human history as a whole, and in its parts, is a fable, or book of tables, with one moral, verifiable in the fortunes of the State, revealed in the cases of the Family and the Man. Human life to Herodotus is a sphere for the realisation of Divine Judgments. The rise and fall of communities, the fates of individuals alike proclaim themselves manifestations of an overruling interference and providence. The judgments are not, indeed, mysterious, but intelligible. Explaining, rather than paraphrasing, the thought of Herodotus, one might say that the judgment is human, the power which fulfils it is divine. this view of human affairs tends at times to trivialities. becomes a substitute for hard thinking. It furnishes an easy exit to every moral problem. It does duty instead of an investigation into the actual circumstances of an obscure case. It encourages ethical and devout intuition as a substitute for the discovery of intrigue and policy, the lower and higher springs of human action. It eliminates accident; it tends to eliminate pity and pathos. Though it begins in poetry, it ends in the flattest commonplaces. But it has one great merit—it appeals to the wide public, not to this or that school or clique; it preserves, to a wonderful extent, facts which are significant, and leaves the philosopher or critic to place his own interpretations upon the facts which have been preserved by their very apotheosis. Herodotus was not, of course, in any sense the inventor of that philosophy of life which meets us in his pages. On one side the doctrine of divine feeling and judgment and their exhibition in human history is but the application of the common Greek standards of character and conduct to the fortunes of states and nations, of great persons and families. The principles of the divine justice are but the maxims of popular ethics writ large,

and applied on a large seale. In literature this application had a long history before the time of Herodotus, beginning at least with the Homeric poems, and passing, through lyric and tragic poetry, to the creators of prose literature. If originality is to be claimed for Herodotus in this connexion, it must be sought rather in his application of the doctrine to the fortunes of nations, and in the enlargement of the sphere and operation of this poetic justice by its introduction as a principle of artistic creation into logography. It here especially concerns us to observe the variety of the formulae employed by Herodotus for its expression, and their incidence in the fourth, fifth and sixth Books. principal terms, with their cognates, occur for the expression of the doctrine, as verifiable in history: Φθόνος, νέμεσις, τίσις, δίκη. A consideration of these terms, and an examination of their employment, can leave little room for doubt that the first is the most emphatically anthropopathetic,1 and the last the most purely moral and objective,2 while the second inclines to the region of human feeling,3 and the third to the greater austerity of the purely moral judgment.4 It is also clear that in the usage of

^{5. 92 (}the injustice of tyranny, ep. 6. 127, Pheidon): and as the truly just man is blessed (Skythes, 6. 21, δικαιδτατον... γήρας μέγα δλβιος έων ἐτελεύτησε), so the unjust man is surely punished (6. 86, Glaukos). To be punished or to make atonement for wrong-doing is the law of this world (τῶν πρώτερον άδικημάτων δοῦναι δίκας, 6. 87), and has the highest sanction (ἡ δὲ Πεθίη σφέας ἐκέλειν 'Αθηναίοιοι δίκας διδύναι, 6. 139), and well is them that recognise this law (cp. 6. 92). The corruption of human justice (δικην δδικον δικάζειν, 5. 25) is deservedly punished with condign severity.

The term νέμεσις does not occur in these Books as it happens; though we are within measurable distance of that idea in the myth of Adrastos, 5. 97, see notes ad l., and perhaps not far off, in the δρκον πάις άνάντιμος of the 'oracle' put into the mouth of Leotychides, 6. 86.

The term rlass and its cognates might appear in some respects the most purely objective, supplying, as they do. a formula for the lex talionis as a fact,

Herodotus the first two terms are more distinctly religious, the last two more ethical. It can hardly be a mere accident that in the three Books here in question the formula of φθόνος. νέμεσις, almost disappear, giving way to the more abstract and colder formula of tious and diky, or even to the indifference of a purely fatalistic principle.1 It may be that the change is due, at least in part, to a difference in the date and mood in which Herodotus compiled this portion of his work. Without endorsing the theory that his visit to Egypt produced any sceptical development, or tendency, in his mind,2 it is still possible to argue that the various portions of the work of Herodotus were not all composed in the same vein, and that in the course of thirty years or so his mind underwent some development and readjustment in the light of his ever-growing experience. But anything like a radical change or conversion in the mind of Herodotus cannot be discovered in his work. In any case he left all the passages, in which the lower authropopathetic and least defensible descriptions of the divine nature are to be found, standing in the last and mature revision of the whole work; and the elements for a sceptical education were much more efficient in the philosophic schools of Ionia, or of Magna Graecia, than in the temples of Egypt. Nor could it be mere chronological differences in the subject that account for the differences in the formulac, which express the judgment of Herodotus on the course of affairs; for in regard to the most recent section of events, the invasion of Xerxes, the doctrine of the divine $\phi\text{o'vos}$ is formulated not less explicitly than in regard to the more remote. Something plainly depends upon the scale of action, the elements of contrast; and if Artabanos applies for the benefit of Xerxes 8 the same without the intervention of the act of judgment implied by δίκη. But such an appearance is illusory. For, in the first place, τίσις τίσασθαι, et sim. are more nearly related to human feeling than δίκη, and, secondly, the τίσις only becomes part of the divine order when it is related to δίκη and the judgment therein contained. The following reff. will show that a real τίσις implies a real, or supposed, ἀδίκημα, ἀδικία, as antecedent, 1. 1, 118, 139; δ. 77, 79, 91, 105; 6. 72, 75, 84, 87, 92, 101 (cp. 5. 102). The most perfect expression of the law is found in the divine verse 5. 50, οὐδείτ ἀνθρώπων ἀδικῶν τίσιν οὐκ ἀποτίσει. It may be added that the term fβρις, or an equivalent, is not infrequently found to express, or explain, the wrong, 4. 146, 159; 5. 74; 6. 87, 127, 137, ep. 4. 93 f.; 5. 88; 6. 92; 6. 10, etc.

doctrine, in almost the same words, which is put into Solon's mouth for the benefit of Kroisos, one reason may be that Kroisos and Xerxes supplied the two greatest and most thrilling examples within Greek memory to illustrate this strain of Greek thought. Something also may turn upon the state and condition of the sources available for Herodotus. The story of Xerxes, the story of Kroisos, as surely as the story of Periandros or the story of Glaukos, had been ethicised and pragmatised before Herodotus undertook to narrate them. The story of Marathon was still in the making, and more a matter of private interpretation; the supernatural ornaments were not wanting to it;2 but the Athenian sources followed by Herodotus, pragmatic though they were, could not wholly obliterate the historic significance or even the immediate causality of that victory.3 The story of the Ionian revolt is curiously free from the supernatural deposit, whether as a constituent, or as a reflective, element.4 The lesson of the story as told by Herodotus is an almost purely political and historical lesson. So far as his sources were not affected by later political interests, they seem to go back to authentic and contemporary testimony of one kind or another. That the historical element is not always in inverse proportion to the amount of supernaturalism in a story is proved by the case of the Scythian campaign, where the element of fiction is patent and preponderant, and the supernaturalism is conspicuous only by its absence. The story as a whole may have been calculated to exhibit a case of human pride and ambition foiled and punished by divine will; but the lesson is not explicitly enforced, and the story is largely an illustration of military, rather than of ethical,

It is observable that Hdt, is very far from restricting the significance of the Delian earthquake to the campaign which, according to him, it immediately preceded, 6, 98. The epiphany of Pan, 6, 105, the dream of Hippias, c, 107, the vision of Epizelos, c, 117, the dream of Datis, c, 118, the coincidence, ec. 108, 116, exhaust the marvels of Marahon in the Herodotean record. But the miraculous element is still far larger than in the stories of the Scythian campaign and Ionian revolt.

maxims. Stories of Mardonios, of Dorieus, of Kleomenes, of Miltiades 4 had all been ethicised and pietised, that is rationalised, in terms acceptable to the feelings of good Hellenes, before they reached Herodotus. How much his own art or piety added in such cases it is difficult, perhaps impossible, to determine. In the case of Kleomenes, the actual variant of the historian himself involves but a distinction without a difference.⁵ The story of Glaukos likewise points to the source of such implicit morals; for it cannot be supposed that Herodotus simply invented that story. Neither in these, nor in other cases, have we the means of determining the exact limits of Herodotus' creative energy as an author. His style is his own,7 as much as any word, thought, language or method can ever be the proper and sole work of one individual mind. His materials are all but invariably worked up into the forms and phrases of his own style; 8 it is very rarely that he presents his materials raw, or just as he obtained them.9 The speeches, as they stand in his work, can hardly be authentic, however much of traditional matter they may directly, or indirectly, preserve. It is not likely that any story or anecdote, as a rule, loses in the telling, as Herodotus tells it; but that he deliberately fabricated anecdote, legend or narrative is an hypothesis beyond All but the greatest achievement of his art is the work as a whole, the wholeness of the work. But this wholeness can best be understood when the work is regarded as a result of growth, revision, reflection and time, almost a lifetime: not a product, conceived as it stands, and worked out, at one time and one place, in accordance with that single preconception. The summit of the writer's art is to have all but completely obliterated the evidences of that process by which his work reached its relative perfection, rendering any and every hypothesis on the subject apparently beyond the conditions of absolute verification. far as reasonable hypotheses go, they are to be reached almost solely by a simple yet searching analysis of the work into its constituent parts and elements, and a critical observation of the general and special qualities and characters of the materials, or elements, out of which the work, as a whole, has been created. In the present edition that method is exhibited in application to a good third of the work, in accordance with the initial principle of division expounded above. That the exhibition is complete, or exhaustive, is not here insinuated; nor is it to be denied that its results, in regard to any given portion of the work, must depend, in the final resort, on its application to the work from beginning to end.

THE TEXT

THE Greek Text printed in this edition is taken, not without corrections, from Stein's smaller edition, Herodoti Historiac. Ad recensionem suam recognovit Henricus Stein. Berolini, apud Weidmannos. A. MDCCCLXXXIV. That edition presents a more conservative result than would be generally acceptable now-adays, or than Stein himself, perhaps, would now endorse, as appears from the later issues of his annotated edition of Bks. 7 (1889), 8, 9 (1893). result, however, represents an average of the codices, as good, perhaps, as any other, and therefore, apart from certain practical advantages, lends itself conveniently to the purposes of the historical commentator. In the Notes, however, some space has inevitably been devoted to various readings, emendations and conjectures, and a few contributions to the ideal text have been attempted. The textual criticism of Herodotus has, indeed, for some time past been largely and justifiably exercised in conjectural emendation. The condition and classification of the MSS, appear to have been fairly well ascertained, and the statement of the case, as given by Stein in his larger edition (1869), still, in the main, holds the field. Of some six and forty codices Stein rejected five and thirty, as critically useless; of the eleven remaining codices he took five, as the basis of his text, using the others as subsidiary or illustrative. Having regard merely to the actually extant and best MSS, it is generally agreed that they are ultimately derived from two main types: I. A text represented by the three oldest MSS., the Medicean, Mediceus (A) succ. X., a Roman, Passioneus (B) succ. XI., and a Florentine, Florentiaus, or Laurentianus (C) sacculi, ut videtur, XI., now, like A, in the Laurentian Library. II. A text represented by a Roman, Vaticanus (R) sacc. XIV., a Parisian, Parisinus (P) sacc., ut videtur, XIII., a Viennese, Vindobonensis (V), and the Sancroft MS. in Emmanuel College, Cambridge (S, or s), this last having a special interest for English scholars, as its collation formed the characteristic of Gaisford's text. These two main types are indicated in A. Holder's edition by the symbols a (= A + B), and β (= R + V + S), which symbols have been occasionally employed in the following Notes. Speaking broadly, Stein's texts incline in favour of the first class, a, and especially of A, while the tendency of later editors has been to increase the authority of the second, β , and especially of R. (See C. U. Cobet, Mnemosyne, 1882, pp. 400 ff., M. Wehrmann, de Herodotei codicis Romani auctoritate. Halle, 1882.) The whole of the fifth Book, however, happens to be wanting in this Roman MS. It would be rash to assert that the last word has been said upon the authority of the existing codices; but, meanwhile, criticism has been busy, on the strength of the approximate agreement above indicated, in restoring the original text, not merely upon the basis of the MSS. readings, but by the aid of copious conjecture. There are three directions in which this work has been carried on: first, towards the removal of glosses and interpolations, mostly short; the only long passage, in the books here immediately under consideration, open to grave suspicion being 6. 122, a chapter actually omitted in a (ABC). Secondly, in the direction of marking, and supplying lacunae, a class of corruptions which editors are tending to enlarge more and more. In the third place, an effort is being made to purify and restore the true Herodotean dialect, not alone from the literary sources, but also from epigraphic evidences. Whether this last device can result in a genuine restoration of the Archetype, from which ex hypothesi all existing MSS, are descended, much more in the sure restoration of genuinely Herodotean forms, are problems involving some previous questions, as, for example, the relation of the dialect of inscriptions in evidence to the literary forms adopted by Herodotus, which cannot here be pursued. Remarks upon the constitution of the text have been introduced in the Notes following, mainly where they seemed to be demanded by material or historical considerations. It is assumed that every student of the text, as such, will have at his command the larger edition of Stein (Herodoti Historiae. Recensuit Henricus Stein. Berlin, 1869), exhibiting the testimonia as well as the MSS. readings, together with the indispensable edition of Holder (Herodoti Historiae recensuit Alfred Holder. Leipzig, 1886, 1888), the apparatus criticus of which includes the principal emendations up to date; and it were well not to overlook the strictly castigated edition of van Herwerden (HPOAOTOY ICTOPIAI recognovit Henricus van Herwerden, 4 vols. Utrecht, N. D.), which, though designed, perhaps like the archetype of class β above described, in usum scholarum, is a monument of critical courage, not less acceptable to the historical student than exemplary to the textual reformer. Cobet's recension of the text of the three Books here in question is to be found in Mnemosyne, 1884, pp. 77 ff., 129 ff. The Index Lectionum, at the end of volume II., exhibits the critical apparatus of this edition in a continuous form.

6. ως και πρότερον. 1. 103-107. The phrase proves nothing concerning the original order of composition.

Though nomad hordes had swept over civilized Asia, an dpxh of the Scyths is hardly to be admitted (pace Guest, Origines Celticae i. 17). The idea illustrates a pragmatic tendency towards artificial combinations and perspective in historiography. There are other misconceptions in the passage. That the Scyths entered Asia in pursuit of the Kinmerians is very doubtful; that the Median overlordship preceded the invasion of the nomads is certainly not true. The number of years (28) is also suspect. On these three points see further Appendix I.

2. 1. τους δε δούλους. This chapter comes in awkwardly, the matter it contains is suspicious, and the logic (τοῦ γάλακτος civexer) questionable; but these considerations are not sufficient to call its authenticity into question. Stein supposes it a later insertion by the author himself; and attempts have been made to diminish its harshness by emendation and rearrangement. That mare's milk was a principal item in Scythian diet is certain, and that the yield was increased by some such strange operation as is here described is probable (see Rawlinson, ad locum). It may be unther argued from the passage that even the nomad Scyths possessed slaves, and Rawlinson apparently accepts the statement that the slaves were all blinded. But in c. 20 infra we are told that the Soyths between the river Gerrhos and 'the Trench' consider all the other Seyths their slaves. We are evidently dealing with inexact terms and ideas. Blindness is said to be common in South Russia (vide Bachr ad l.), and blind men, whether bond or free, could make themselves useful in preparing the kommiss, though they could not guide a plough, or look after droves of eattle. Slaves were of course largely exported from Scythia to Athens, but koumiss was apparently not generally known to the Hellones, or this passage would, perhaps, not have been inserted. past does not prove that Herodotus saw the process or its result, or even that it was explained to him personally by native Seyths (cp. Introduction, § 20, pp. lxxvii tl.). Neumann, Die Hellenen im Skuthenlande, p. 279, calls the story eine abgeschmackte Erzahlung, and is shocked by Helt,'s logic, or want of logic: Rawlinson thinks the blindness adapted to pasteral life, an opinion directly traversed by Stein, who thinks there is some etymological confusion at the base of the stery: the Seyths gave slaves a name which Greeks mistranslated τεφλοί — hine illae lacrymae (ερ. Schol. ad Aristoph. Ερ. 959 Φαρινός μολγόν ἀντί τοῦ τεφλοίν. Ἡρόδοτος δὲ Ιατορεί τοὺς Μολγούς τοὐτους ἐπάνω τὲξ Σκυτέαν είναι. Οπ which Dobree: Phainus videtur transtulisse ad Hippemolgos quae tradit Herodotus de Arimaspis. Phaines seems also to have misunderstood the word μολγός, Lobeck, Δημοφράσμας ii. 906, but that does not here concern us). Anyway, as Hansen (Ost-Durapa §§ 16-202) points out, Hdt. is guilty of an inconsequence, in not explaining the connexyon between the blindness of the slaves and the preparation of the milk: and no rearrangement of the text cures this defect. 3. 2. νότης. The notion of a kindred but inferior clan, or stratum, as being the offspring of free-born women and base or servile fathers is common. Well-known instances are those of the Parthentee at Sparta, see the foundation legend of Tarentum, Strabe, 27S (ed. Teubn. 1, 382), Aristot. Fol. 8, 7, 2, 1306 b the Argive 'slaves' at Tiryns (6, 53 cufina), the Pelasgo-Atheniaus in Lemnos (6, 13s infra). A legend could enly have incorporated such a motive after society had entered the patriarchal slage. The story here is inconsistent, as Stein points out, with the view taken in c. 11 infra, and 1, 103, as it implies that the Scyths settled in Europe for a time before pursuing the kimmerii into Asia. Hilt. seems unconscious of the inconsistency. Further, the report of the ipsissima verba of the Scythian orator, and the formulae used by him (specially δμοσοί τε καὶ ές δροδων), do not render the story more probable. It has a flavour of Greek political philosophy about it: a moral for Greek slave-states.

4. τάφρον. Cp. c. 20 inira. This trench is a puzzle to the geographers. Did it run E. and W. across the isthmus of Perikop, and divide the Crimea from the mainland, or did it run N. and S. within the Crimea, cutting off the Eastern portion of the peninsula! In after times at least there was a trench in the former situation; the mantion of the mountains favours the latter supposition, and the majority of commentators adopt it, the rather as in c. 20 infra this rappos is represented as forming part of the E. frontier of the Seyths royal, and so seems to run N. and S. The misconception of the situation and lie of the Crimea, c. 90 infra, renders this supposition tenable. But there was probably more than one rappos in Seythia, and Hdt.'s ignorance of the true site and shape of the Crimea, and the questionable character of the tracition about the replace and their sons, discredit any fixed identification.

6. 4. τοῦ βασιλίος. Holder reads τοὺς βασιλίας, Wesseling τοὺς βασιλήσες. Would it not be better to cut out the first τ. β. altegether? The omission of the proper name Kolaxais is observable, after the introduction of the two other proper names, Lipoxais and Arpoxais. Could it be that Hdt. felt a misgiving about the derivation of the name Skoloti from the king's name? Or did the text originally run (omitting the first rou Basilies) Exolorous Exolorou βασιλέοι ἐπωνυμίην, as Abicht and Stein suggest? But Skoloti might come of Kolaxais: or rather, perhaps, Kolaxais of Skoloti. Stein favours the derivation of Seyth from a word meaning to shoot with the bow : Rawlinson takes Skidns

The tripartition of the Skoloti or Seyths is implied in this legendary pedigree, and perhaps also a sense that the Paralatae (Royal, Nomad) Scyths were the last comers. Compare the Hellenic pedigree of Aeolians, Dorians, Ionians and Achaians, in which, however, the tribes are classified rather in the order of Hellenic dignity, than in the order of chronological precedence. In the next chapter a tripartition of In the next chapter a tripartition of the Paralatae, or of their territory, is ascribed to Kolaxais (sic), so that he, like his father Targitaos, is supposed to have had three sons. These three kingdom of Skopasis (to which the Sauromatae are joined), the kingdom of Idanthyrsos, the largest, and the kingdom of Taxakis (with which the Geloni and Budini are associated). From c. 10 it might be inferred that a tripartition lay between Agathyrsi, seyths and Geloni: that being in a story from another source.

ποτήματα c. 5 supra, which include an αροτρον, surely a strange implement to be worshipped by the Nomads. (5) The exact nature of a σάγαρι is doubtful: 7. 64 seems to identify it with άξίνη. The cult of the golden σάγαρι contrasts with the better authenticated cult of the iron ἀκινάκης c. 62 infra. (6) Private property in land among the Nomads is improbable; and the enormous scale upon which it is granted—as much as he can ride round in a whole day (suprise to sunset t)—does not make ποιήματα c. 5 supra, which include an day (sunrise to sunset!)—does not make it more credible. That the Scythic it more credible. That the Seythic kings had gold cups is certain (cp. cc. 8, 71 in/ra): for the rest, we seem to be in contact with a genuine gold-myth, or treasure-saga: though it might be rash to assert that in the annual feast and sacrifice, the sleep sub Jore, the day's ride, and the death within the year, we have indications of the source and symbolism of the supposed cult. There is nothing to show that Hdt. himself had seen the sacred gold treasure, guarded so jealously by the 'kings,' and fraught with such dire fatality to its guardian; there is no reason to believe that he had his direct knowledge of it from other than a Greek knowledge of it from other than a Greek source, though the fable has a genuine native and primitive ring in it, worthy of the Elda.

8. 8cd 70070. For going to sleep? or for guarding the gold and taking the risk of being overcome by supernatural sleep? If he went to sleep it was feared, perchance, that the Niflings would come and steal or recover the gold. and infer specification being an arbition. This is the only mention of Gades in Herodotus (cp. b. 9 infra).

The Herakles whose pillars were at Gades was the Tyrian, and this legend, intended to satisfy Hellenic feeling, suggests (to us) the idea that the Phoenicians were in the Pontos before the Greeks. Cp. c. 82 infra. The version in Diodorus 2, 43, substitutes Zens for in Diodorus, 2. 43, substitutes Zeus for

Hdt.'s rejection of the ocean-stream theory probably fortified him in his rejection of this legend, which took that theory apparently for granted. Hekataios had previously rejected it: Arrian, Anab. 2. 16. Herakles was perhaps supposed to return from Erytheia by ocean, or its shore: otherwise it would be difficult to justify the introduction in this place of the ocean. In this advent of the Tyrian Herakles to Scythia from the land side (N. or N.W.), have we a confession or confusion of old trade-routes from the Baltic to the Euxine? (Cp. c. 33 infra.)

The expression used by Hdt. would of course cover Greeks on all coasts of the l'ontos, but it is not to be supposed that the Greeks it is not to be supposed that the Greeks were unanimous in preferring this Heraklean legend. Possibly the story would be especially popular in Herakleia Pontica. It is characteristically Greek. A Herakleid lineage is provided for the Scythic kings, and an Hellenic claim to the soil thereby established. Cp. the Herakleid legend in Peloponuese (6, 55 infra), the Herakleid genealogy in Lydia (1, 7), and the story of Dorieus and the projected colony in Sicily (5, 43 infra). Certain touches in the native legend and custom are preserved; the legend and custom are preserved; the number (3) of sons, the preference to the youngest, the bow, the drinking cup.

'Scythic' or 'Helleno-Pontic' traditions. One is tempted to make the Greeks responsible mainly for the form of the tradition, reproducing as it does the terminology and notives of Greek politicians, and to refer the matter mainly to the barbarians; and further, to understand by 'barbarians' in this passage the Kimmerian refugees, and by Greeks, those of Sinope. In accepting this tradition as in the main the historical one we are not committed to the belief that the Kimmerians volun-tarily vacated their territory, and that all the fighting was confined to the heroic duel between the chieftains. It is hardly likely that the refugees at Sinope were drawn wholly from 'the at snope were drawn wholly from 'the masses,' or reached their new home without chiefs, and told a story there so much to their own discredit, (Rawlinson is wrong in translating $\textit{\beta}\sigma\textit{\chi}\chi\text{as} \text{''} Royal \text{tribe.''}\)
Hdt. makes himself responsible for the geography of this tradition, but it involves a grayar difficulty. Whather it involves a grave difficulty. Whether the Araxes, here taken as the boundary between Asiatic Scythia and European between Asiatic Scythia and European Kimmeria, answer to the great river usually understood by that name, or to the Wolga, or to some other, in any case it must be sought far eastwards of the Tyras (Dniestr), beside which the last resting-place of the Kimmerians is set. This consideration drives us, in rationalising the legend, upon Niebuhr's (angustully faroused by hypothesis (apparently favoured by Rawlinson), that the Kimmerians quitted Europe and made their way to Sinope, not by the Caucasus, but by the Thracian Bosperos. Or, might they not have found their way across the sea! The real point of this tradition remains that the Scythians superseded and drove out the Kimmerians in South Russia, coming themselves from Asia, and further East. Cp. Appendix I.

9. πρὸ σποδοῦ is an emendation of Stein's on the MSS. which read πρὸς πολλούς (β) οι πρό πολλού (α), and he compares & 74 πρό χώρης δοριαλώτου μένοντας μάχεσθαι. The parallel is not extensive or exact. It justifies πρό = ὑπέρ, but nothing further. The territory of the Kimmerians is not in the hands of the Scyths as Attica in the hands of Xerxes, and σποδού for χώρης οτ χώρης αλωτού or such expression, is without other example. σποδός = pulvis c. 172 infra of course proves nothing. In c. 35 infra the word is used in its strict meaning. Kallenberg, Holder, and others read mods moddors.

10. µévorras is another difficulty. The MSS. give debueror, deduera and girbuera. Reiske emends δεομένων, which Holder and van Herwerden adopt. Valekenaer reads οὐδέν δέον μένοντας, Buttmann δέοι μένοντας, Bredovins μένοντας (omitting δέοι), and this last is adopted by Kallenberg, ed. Tenbn. Stein in his annotated ed. 3 1877, reads and defends δεόμενον = δέον: cp. Soph. O. C. 570, Plat. Men. 79

^{20.} ἐτι δηλός Ł. ö. τ. For this remark Hdt. is personally responsible, and it may be based on autopsy, or information gained on the north side of the Pontos. Taken in connexion with the local archaeology adduced in c. 12 infra as external evidence in support of the tradition preferred by Hdt., it seems to make for the hypothesis that this barbaro-Hellenic tradition was local in Sinope.

^{22.} ἐρήμην. The Scyths have no credit in this tradition for anything but numbers (στρατοῦ μεγάλου supra). The Kimmerian chiefs are heroic.

^{12. 1.} kal vův. This chapter consists of four sentences, or, including the re-capitulation at the end, of five. The first sentence contains some valuable local archaeology. The second adds a statement which may be accepted as historical. The third is probably a mixture of truth and error, which is raised, in the fourth, into a complete misconception, by a pragmatic combination of unrelated events.

The Kimmerians to avoid the Seyths from Asia are represented as flying castward into Asia! The Seyths who entered Media, or rather Assyria, were probably not European but Asiatic nomads. See Appendix I.

Σινώπη π. 'Ε. Sinope was perhaps more, or less, than 'Hellenic'; it was already Athenian, when Hdt. wrote (or revised) this passage (cp. Plutarch, Fer. c. 20). In any case the phrase illustrates Hdt.'s Hellenic feeling. His sense of the contrast between Hellas and Barbarison is always the contrast between Hellas and Barbarison is always to the contrast between Hellas and Barbarison in always the contrast th barism is always deeper than his per-ception of the divisions of Hellas.

^{13. 1.} ton 8t. The version of Aristeas has two points in common with the tradition just given: it is at variance with the nation of the state of the with the native Scythic legend, and it ascribes the advent of the Scythians to a general pressure and migratory movement of tribes, a vera causa. Aristeas the pressure originates in the N.E., not in the east, a view which some, with Stein, may prefer. The story is based on Issedonian tradition, c. 16 infra, and supported by the existence of the Skoloti east of the Thysagetae c. 22 infra. Hdt. rejects a legend, which, though committed, or supposed to be committed, to writing and vouched for by a well-known name, incorporated one-eyed men, griffins, Hyperboreans, and the ocean: four things which he cannot digest. But he uses it as a negative argument against the 'Seythie' story. Cp. Introduction, § 21. 2. On the Issedones cp. c. 26 infra.

 The νοτίη θαλάσση is here of course the Euxine, as compared with the (north) sea mentioned above; the relation of that 'northern sea,' on which dwelt the Hyperboreans, to the Okeanos river does not clearly appear.

14. 2. τον δέ περί αὐτοῦ κτλ. The two chapters 14, 15 contain a remarkable digression upon Aristeas, under which name are combined and confused the real or supposed author of the Arimaspeia, extant in Hdt.'s day (Bergk, Gr. Lit-Gesch. ii. 99), and a mythical figure, which may be taken as at once the son and the double of the god Apollo himself. To rationalise such stories as are here and elsewhere told of Aristeas into "the alternate appearance and disappearance of an enterprising traveller" (R.) may safely be pronounced dypoixes tis oodia. To deny all historical reality to Aristens (with Crusius, Roscher's Lexikon 2814), is perhaps the excess of scopticism, attributable to an exaggerated 'solarisa-tion' of myths and legends. The date of the historical Aristeas cannot, however, he fixed with any certainty. Invostous here is the reading of a (=A + B) supported by ancient citations: β (=R+V) read τριηκοσίουσι. The text would make the date of Aristeas' poem about 690-080 p.c., which may be accepted as an approximation, pace Suidas, who makes Aristeas contemporary with Kroisos and Kyros. The poem of Aristeas may have been among the firstfruits of Ionic adventure in the Pontos before any actual Greek colony was established on the northern coast. The settlements are dated to the beginning of the eighth century 12.C. Foundation of Kyzikos, c. 756 n.c. Refoundation, c. 680 n.c. See Buselt, Gr. Geschicht. i. 321 f. But cp. Grote, iii, 61, who dates "the mystic poet Aristeas" about 540 n.c. On Aristeas see further Smith, Diet. Biography i. 292, the excellent article in Pauly, R.-E. i. 1551, and Roscher, Lexikon 547 ff. s. re. Aristatos, Hypermoneren. The historical reality of Aristeas is accepted incidentally by Flach, Gesch. der Gr. Lyrik (1883-4), and expressly by Hergk, l. c. supra. The passage before us here, if it proves anything, proves that Hdt. visited Prokonnesos and Kyzikos, and at some subsequent time Metawas established on the northern coast. and at some subsequent time Meta-pontion. (On the first two, Kiepert, Man. § 66, on Metapontion § 235.) It is also valuable as illustrating Hellenic ideas in religion, and the action of Delphi. Artake, a little to the N.W. of Kyzikus. The passage is of the highest importance as a simple and candid revelation of the principles and method of research employed by Hdt. Cp. Introduction, § 21.

It is certainly not identical or coextensive with Book 4 (Melpomene). Is it even co-extensive with the Seythian portion of the book 1 Or is it not, ruther, to be reduced to the merely geographical passage following (cc. 17-

The geographical account of Seythia is a λόγος not merely as told by but as received by Herodotus; based mainly upon hearsay, or script, and little, if at all, upon his own eyesight. See Introduction, § 20.

17. 1. ἀπό. In the passage which follows (cc. 17-31) Hdt. attempts a sketch of the geography and ethnography of Seythia and its surroundings. The relation of this sketch to the subsequent sketch of Seythia (cc. 99-101) is problematic: cp. Appendix II. The method pursued by Hdt. here is apparently to enumerate the tribes in four or five groups from W. to E. and the subordinate members of each group in order from S. to N. as follows: I I Kallippidae (Helleno-Seyths), 2 Alazones, 3a Seythie φροφρος, 4 Neuri (c. 17), II 3b Seythie γεωργοί, 5 Audrophagi (c. 18), III 3e Seythie νομάδει (c. 19), 3d Seythie βασιλήσα, 6 Melanchlaeni (c. 20), IV 7 Sauromatae, 8 Budini, 9 Thyssagetae, 10 Iurki, 3e Seythie ἐπωίσνές, 11 Argippaci (cc. 21-23). We may add as a fifth group V 12 the Issedones (cc. 25, 26), 13 the Arimaspi (c. 27). The descriptive passage is broken by reviews of the sources, or by similar criticism (cc. 24, 26, 27), and succeeded by an essay in the physical geography of the region (cc. 28-31).

It is further evident that the whole passage is composed of three successive flights of somewhat diverse matter and authority, A (cc. 17-20) giving the geography of Seythia proper, 6 tribes, groups I-III., fairly intelligible. B (cc. 21-23) geography of five tribes: Group IV, closed by a review of the sources, and an assertion of their trustworthiness. C (cc. 25, 26) the more or less fabulous tribes round the Issodones and Arimaspi. This last flight lands us fairly in the world of myths. The discussion of one-eyedmen and griffins (c. 27) leads insensibly to other marvels, of climate, and to the rationalisation of the story of the feathers (cc. 28-31). And while in this vein Hdt, adds a discussion of the legend of the Hyperboreans (cc. 32-35), who, if existent, would have crowned the ethnography of the north. This discussion opens up the wider question of ecumenical geography (37 ff.) from which he ingeniously returns via the Pontos (46) to the rivers of Seythia.

A (cc. 17-20) gives the geography of

Scythia proper in three stages. The first group of tribes between the Hypanis (Bug) and the Borysthenes (Dniepr). The northern limit, north of the Neuri, is desert. The enumera-tion closes with a confession of ignorance: ἐρημος ἀνθρώπων, ὅσων ἡμείς Τόμετ. The second group, east of the Borysthenes, is similarly bordered on the north by a desert, and the enumeration closes with the same confession of ignorance: εθνος άνθρώπων ούδέν, δσον ignorance: three arbourns odder, δου ήμεις ιδμεν. Similarly the third group terminates on the north by a desert: έρημός έστι ανθρώπων, κατόσον ήμεις ιδμεν. The core of the first group is formed by the Σκέθαι άροτηρες, of the second by the Σ. γεωργοί (apparently a distinction without a difference), and of the third by the Naudšes or rather than the third by the Nouciões, or rather the Royal horde. Each Seythic division is bordered on the north by a non-Seythic tribe, which intervenes before the desert; these three tribes are the Neuri, the Androphagi, and the Melanchlaeni. This is all beautifully symmetrical, but its architectural symmetry does not render it more plausible. Nor is the ethno-graphy made satisfactory by the omission of the Auchatae Katiari-Traspies and Paralatae of c. 6 supra: or, at least, by the neglect of those appellatives. Herodotus is not greatly concerned to harmonise the varying nomen-clature employed in his various sources or authorities: yet it is surely an inconsequence, in a passage professing to give an exhaustive account of the geography of the land, to omit all re-ference to the native ethnography (c. 6). It is also eyident that in this passage he has not in view the abstract below, cc. 99-101.

The èμποριου here is to be identified with the άστο e. 78 infra and the πόλις of c. 79 infra. There is no ground, as Rawlinson says, for a substantial distinction, and all three terms denote Olbia. The variation in the terms, however, and the emission of the actual name of the place here, seem to support the view that the passages are taken from various sources, and to augment θαλασσίων μεσαίτατον έστι πάσης τῆς Σκυθίης), ἀπὸ τούτου πρῶτοι Καλλιππίδαι νέμονται ἐόντες "Ελληνες Σκύθαι, ὑπὲρ δὲ τούτων ἄλλο ἔθνος οἱ 'Αλαζόνες καλέονται. οὖτοι δὲ καὶ οἱ Καλλιππίδαι τὰ μὲν ἄλλα κατὰ ταὐτὰ Σκύθησι ἐπασκέουσι, ς σῖτον δὲ καὶ σπείρουσι καὶ σιτέονται, καὶ κρόμμυα καὶ σκόροδα καὶ φακοὺς καὶ κέγχρους. ὑπὲρ δὲ 'Αλαζόνων οἰκέουσι Σκύθαι ἀροτῆρες, οἱ οὐκ ἐπὶ σιτήσι σπείρουσι τὸν σῖτον ἀλλ' ἐπὶ πρήσι. τούτων δὲ κατύπερθε οἰκέουσι Νευροί. the doubt whether Herodotus ever set foot in Scythia proper. Cp. Introduc-

Rawlinson considers this passage conclusive against Niebuhr's scheme of Scythian geography, on the strength of the word māons. If the word māons be thus unduly pressed it will result that in this chapter Hdt. places Olbia at the S.E. corner of Scythia, between the Pontus and the Maeotis! In c. 101 infra Hdt. clearly places the mouth of the Borysthenes (and therefore virtually Olbia) exactly half-way between the Ister and the Maeotis, i.e. bisecting the line of the S. coast. R.'s map, moreover, contradicts his note.

If the word πάσης is rightly to be pressed, it would be better to recognise that this passage may have been written when Hdt. was not thinking of the geographical scheme of Scythia found in ec. 99-101, so that in τὰ παραθαλάσσια he need not have included the coast of the Μαιῆτις λίμση. Scythia as conceived or implied in this passage is different from Scythia as conceived, much more clearly, in cc. 99-101. (See Appendix II., on the geography of Scythia II.)

Scythia.)

3. Έλληνες Σκόθαι can hardly mean Scyths that had adopted Hellenic customs (so Stein), for Hdt. goes on to say that the Kallippidae only differ from Scyths in growing wheat and certain regetables, cp. c. 76. Still less could the words mean Hellenes turned Scyths, Bachr quotes a psephism of Olbia, C. I. G. ii. p. 122, No. 2059, for μεξέλληνας who might represent a mixed race.

4. 'Aλαζόνες is the reading of α (Λ + B). 'Aλαζόνες of β (R+V+S) is supported by Strabo, and adopted by Kallenberg and Holder. Bachr reads 'Αλαζώνες. Cp. c. 52 infra, where some additional geographical facts are given.

te. The Neuri are more fully described in another connexion c. 105 infra.

18. 4. ή Υλαίη. "The Bush" (Blakesley), which however no longer deserves the name. That a colony of Greeks dwelling upon the Hypanis (Bug) should bear the name of the Borysthenes (Dniepr) is to be explained by the fact that the latter river is the more important. Kiepert, Manual, § 190, describes Olbia as situated "on the estuary of the Hypanis, which joins the larger estuary of the Borysthenes." Rawlinson, iii. p. 203, gives a still more exact description of the site. Cp. note to c. 53 infra. The colonists may have changed the name of the settlement as it rose from a mere έμπθρων to the dignity of a πόλις, but it continued to be better known outside the neighbourhood by the old title, applied to it by Hdt. in c. 78 infra; cp. Steph. Byzant. sub v. Boρναθένης. The coins of Olbia, 'in all three metals,' recognise only the new name, but there are apparently none extant of the 5th cent. The bronze coins, however, show a head of the rivergod Borysthenes. Cp. B. Head, Historia Numerum, p. 233. They would be especially for local use.

6. Βορυσθενείτας, a reads Βορυσθενίτας. β reads Βορυσθενίτας.

7. The name of the γεωργοί Σκύθαι seems to caused one of the distinctions between Seyths and the tribe above mentioned of Kallippidae, viz. agriculture. And the terms ἀροτῆρει and γεωργοί both applied to Σκύθαι seem to involve a distinction without a difference.

9. The Pantikapes has not been identified; cp. c. 54 infra.

11. Androphagi is obviously a descriptive epithet, and not a substantive tribal name; as such it might have been applied to the Issedones; c. 26 infra.

19, 6. The Gerrhos cannot be identified with any certainty; cp. c. 56 infra.

20. 2. of aportor. The eastern boundary of this division of Seyths appears to be a line drawn from the trench (cp. c. 3 supra) through the emperium called Krenni on the Lake Masotis, to the river Tanais. From this it appears that the trench is conceived as running rather N. and S. than E. and W. (The form and position of Taurike (the Crimea) beyond the trench are elucidated. 99 infra.) From the next chapter (21) it appears that the end of this line touches the Tanais at its mouth, where it empties into the inner corner (unx51) of the Palus Macotis (cp. c. 100 intra).

The Melanchlaeni who march with these Royal Scyths on the north are, like the Androphagi, rather described by an epithet than named. Dion Chrys. p. 430 (cp. Stein c. 107) speaks of a γένος Σανθών τών Μελαγχλαίνων, and of the descriptive name as due to Greeks. But cp. Rawlinson's n. to c. 107, who thinks it may be a translation of the native

B (cc. 21-23) gives us the geography of five or six tribes beyond the Tannis in a territory which has no collective name, but which is divided into several plots (ἡ πρώτη τῶν λαξίων . . . δευτέρην λαξιν . . . ἐν τοῖσι αὐτοῖσι τόποισι) occupied respectively by the Saurenmatae, the Budini, the Thyssagetae (and the Iurki), Seythian ἐπιἰχτός, and Argippaei; both the physique and situation of these districts being given with confidence, the grounds for which are put forward in c. 24. Herodotus does not pretend to speak as an eye-witness, but it cannot be denied that he was correctly informed of the broad features of the territory, though the symmetrical succession of bare steppe and woodland is somewhat exaggerated. Cp. Stanford's Europe, pp. 165 ff. where three zones are recognised on the tableland to the north by a 'black earth' region (ep. c. p. 160). "Higher up the course of the streams thin eak plantations serve as a transition from the steppes to the region of the woodlands' (ep. c. p. 171). The exact limits, however, of these successive regions are not defined by any hard line.

10. έπιβάς. Holder reads και έπιβάς after β.

^{21. 1.} ποταμόν διαβάντι. To cross the Palus is not thought of; but we learn meidentally that the territory yender was occupied by the Sindi, c. 28 infra. The Tanais is the Don, c. 57 infra.

^{2.} Σανροματίων. See infra ec. 110 ff. Fifteen days' journey is given as the measure of their territory.

^{5.} Boulivos. See infra c. 108. No measure is given for the journey through their territory.

^{6, 6}λη παντοίη. Oak, white beech, and further north birch, juniper and pane are given by modern authorities as the prominent trees of the woodland.

^{22. 3.} ἀποκλίνοντ. The traveller who has hitherto been moving, hypothetically, northward, is here supposed to incline in a north-easterly direction. This conception may very probably correspond to the direction of an ancient trade-route in those parts.

^{4.} Θυσσαγέται. R. interprets "Lesser Getae" in contrast with "Massagetae" or "Greater Getae." Stein compares Μυργέται, Τυραγέται. The Thyssagetae are mentioned again, c. 123. Of the Iurki we hear no more. Their method of hunting, with trained horse and hound, is far from primitive: it is unfortunate that Hdt. does not specify the wild animals hunted. Though the measure of the desert journey is given no estimate is added for the territery of these tribes. In the Seythian settlement beyond the lurki it is natural to suspect rather a remnant left behind on the migration S. or S. W., than a band of emigrants from the W. or S.W., if indeed any positive value is to be attached to so vague an authority. No account, it may be observed, of the dπόστασε is recorded.

23. 4. ἀνθρωποι κτλ. In the hairless snub-nosed tribe, the Argippaci, described in this passage, one is tempted to see a Mongolian type of Central Asia. The food described answers to a species of cherry, still used and prepared by the Kalmucks; but the similarity of food does not justify an inference to an identity of race, and the length of their chins, or beards, and the sanetity of their morals are puzzling characteristics in the Argippaci. Perhaps a negative has dropped out, and we should read γένεια έχοντες οὐ μεγάλα, but in any case we seem to be approaching the neighbourhood of the idealised Hyperboreans; or to be in sight of a substitute for them.

The high mountains here mentioned Rawlinson identifies with those mentioned c.25 infra, and both with the Ural; and he places the Argippaei to the east and the Issedones to the west of the Ural mountains. Herodotus, however, in c. 25 clearly places the Issedones to the east of the Argippaei, and puts no mountains between them. He is, moreover, moving from south to north when he encounters these mountains which bar further pregress and knowledge; the mountains therefore he conceives as running E. and W. This would suit the Altai (with which Heeren identified the mountains mentioned in c. 25), better than the Ural. But it seems an error to attempt any such identifications in these outlying and misty regions of Hdt,'s geography. It is of course possible that some vague rumour of a great chain of mountains N.E. of Scythia carried to Hdt. should refer to the nearer chain of the Ural, but all accurate perspective and orientation have disappeared, and it is not impossible that these mountains in the extreme N.E. of (Herodotean) Europeare an imaginary set-off to the mountains in the extreme W. of Libya, c. 184 infra. If the river Araxes in c. 11 were correctly identified with the Wolga (by Rawlinson) and a knowledge of that river ascribed to Hdt., it is strange that the Araxes-Wolga is not encountered upon this journey from the Tanais (Don) to the (Ural) mountains. These mountains, be it remarked, are not of an imposing elevation, rarely rising above 5000 ft., and though ranging N. and S. for a distance of 1200 miles, they sink at their southern extremity gradually to the plain, and leave a wide gap towards the Caspian.

24. 2. καὶ γάρ. We have here ngain a pause in which the sources of Hdt, 's information are reviewed. These author's notes (ec. 21-27) on his sources advertise the mythical character of the tribes enumerated on the authority of the Isodones: the existence of the Isodones is, however, guaranteed, probably on the authority of Aristeas, c. 13. Some of Hdt.'s information, whether oral or written, comes down, as appears from this passage, through Greeks of Olbia or other mercantile colonies, who owe their knowledge to Scythian travellers, who have to employ interpreters to the number of seven on their way between Olbis and the Argippaei.
3. των . . πυθίσθαι.

nothing in this passage to prove that Hdt, ever set foot in Olbia; or will it be contended that he visited 'all the other Pontic emporia'? Nor even to prove that his statements are based simply on each information. See Introduction,

6. entá. How the number seven is arrived at is not easy to see. Rawlinson includes Scythian, for which Scyths would require no interpreter.

25. 3. δρια ύψηλά. The same as mentioned before c. 23, on the skirts (ἐπάρεα) of which dwell the Argippaei.

5. αἰγίποδας. There seems nothing incredible in the statement, rightly understood, that 'goat-footed' men dwelt on the mountains: it is even curious that Hdt. himself should not have 'rationalised' the phrase; ep. c. 31

6. ifámnyov. In this statement, so utterly incredible to Hdt. in his ignorance of the sphericity of the earth (cp. c. 42 infra), it is natural to see a distorted tradition of the long polar winter; as in the Homeric account of Laistrygonia (Od. 10, 82-86) a dim notion of the midnight

is not without parallels: 1. 216 of the Massagetae, 3. 38 of the Kallatiae, 3. 39 of the Padaei; and on the subject of such feasts of - and on - the dead, see J. G. Frazer, The Golden Bough ii. 80, "It is now easy to understand why a savage should desire to partake of the flesh of an animal or man whom he regards as divine. By cating the body of the god he shares in the god's attributes and powers." The Hyperboreans (cp. c. 32 infra) were said by Hellanikos to destroy sexagenarians.

7. ayihpart. Not 'ornament' (Schweig, and Rawlinson), but 'object of reverence,' almost 'fetish.'

 27. 2. οἱ λέγοντες. Stein explains as referring back to the Arimaspein of Aristons (c. 16 supra where the Issudones are expressly given as the poet's authority). The passage however before us here seems to trace the common Greek rumour (hacis of alla) through the Scyths to the Issedones, cp. c. 32 infra. For the formula ep. c. 43 infra.

6. apipa yap. Rawlinson recognises the scientific character of this philological excursus and admits arima and spu as two genuine Scythic words the meanings of which are certainly known. Eustathios and the Scholiast to Aischyles, Prom. S04, άρι μέν γλρ τδ εν σκυθιστί, μασπός δέ ὁ ὁφθαλμές (upud Stein). Neumann, Die Hellenen im Skythenlamb; p. 195, explains the word by the Finnish vuozin-maa 'Bergland,' Highland; and supposes that Aristeas had called them figuratively Kyklopes, and that Herodotus (and of course Aischyles) took the trope for a trans-lation, and so on. Other philologists have other etymologies. We seem to be in the region of etymological specula-tion, which "is apt to be misleading"

(Rawlinson, iii. p. 5, n. 3). Cp. Appendix I.
28. 1. Svoxetuegos. From such marvels as one-eyed men and griffins Hdt. glides to the portentous climate of Scythia and the European north-cast. Scythia supplied the place in the ancient ovid, or Pouto 1, 3, 37 Scythico quid frigore peius? Hippokrates, de Acre 25 (quoted by Stein as 19), describes it. The Herodotaean description does not appear to be a gross exaggeration, but lacks discrimination. Rawlinson (note" ad l.) supposes a change in the climate for the better in modern times; but the trade and products of the district mentioned by Hdt. himself seem to show that the eight months of winter and four months of cold are an overstatement. Helt, is not speaking from personal experience. "The summer s now intensely hot" R. And it was in antiquity likewise. Cp. Aristot. Prob. 25, 6, Strabe, p. 307 (quoted by St.); see further, Stanford's Europe, p. 185. Blakesley says that the extension of the winter to eight months is "due entirely to the circumstance that the commercial season lasted only four." But why should the commercial season have lasted only four months, if six or more had been available?

His remark on the ass seems questionable. Cp. Burton's Pilgrimage to Merca iii. 339, n. It is more important to olserve that we see here a recognition of physical causation, and of a relation between fauna and environment, which is one of the beginnings of science, as contrasted with mere astonishment or superstition.

30. 2. προσθήκας . . lSlypro. A passage that has been too generally taken as raising the whole problem of the times, places, and methods of composition betrayed by the work of Herodotus, as if this passage must needs have been an additum to the 'first edition' or draught of the whole work (ep. 7. 171). But the Myos here specified is not the whole work, but is the Abyos about Scythia, ep. c. 16 supra; and the doxy) is the doxy) referred to in c. S2 infra. To speak of this short note as an addition to the whole work would be out of all proportion.

There is, in any case, nothing here to prove that this passage was "added at Thurii" (R.). Supposing indeed that Hdt. gleaned his facts at Elis, he may have touched there going, or returning, be-tween Athens and the West, cp. c. 195 infra; or he may have visited Elis from Sparta (3, 55); or he may have visited Elis at some other time for an Olympiad ; or he may never have visited Elis at all: for the mere formula past of airol 'H \ciou does not prove that Herodotus was ever in Elis, or even that he ever discussed the matter with men of Elis. Introduction, §$ 20, 21.

6. ifelavoous kth. Of this fact there need be no doubt as it is vouched further by Pausan. 5. 5, 2, Plutarch,

Mor. 303, and is not without parallels, c.g. the case of the women of Delos (Thuc. 3, 104, 2) and an Alsatian legend, quoted by Stein, connected with the story of S. Deodatus : from Zeitsch. f. d. Philot. iii. 337. That the immediate reason of the custom was a religious one need not be doubted, though the design may have been to encourage horse-breeding (consult Plutarch, l.c.). Hdt. however being in the vein for physical explanations ap-parently discredits the Elean account without hitting upon the sufficiently obvious economic reason.

31. 5. δστις κτλ. It appears that Helt. has in his mind readers, or hearers, who had never seen a heavy fall of snow close by; who had never been out of doors in a snow shower. This condition may have been realised by some fine gentlemen in Hellas from Sieily to Cyprus, from Athens to Naukratis; but, as δστις feming as well as proceeding it near is feminine as well as masculine, it may include here the fair sex, among whose ranks Hdt. even in his own day may have numbered many admirers,

7. ἀνοίκητα. The extreme north is thusin Hdt. sopinion rendered uninhabitable by the cold just as the extreme south by the heat. He would have smiled to hear that the south was as cold as the north. Cp. c. 36 infra.

5. The concluding words rà de mrepà . . deven are a crux to the translators. "And the Scythians, with their neighbours, call the snowllakes feathers because, I think, of the likeness which they bear to them" Rawlinson. "The they bear to them "Rawlinson. "The teathers then is a name which the Seythians, in my opinion, give to the snow, indicating the similarity" Blakesley. The following version might do: "In speaking of (the) feathers the Seyths and their neighbours are in my opinion speaking of the snow under a figure." Larcher ad l. cites I'salm 147. 5 dat nivem sicut lanam. (Mr. Macaulay translates: "I think therefore that by the feathers the Seythians and those who dwell near them mean and those who dwell near them mean symbolically the snow.")

9. περιοίκους, sc. πλησιοχώροις (c. 33

infract al.).

32. 4. άλλά. Blakesley endorses Wolf's suspicion that the sentence άλλ' Ἡσιόδω - έποίησε is the insertion of a late grammarian. If that were so the following sentence πολλφ δέ ατλ. would be an inconsequence (as if Hdt. wrote—"The seythians say nothing, but the Delians ay most "!).

5. "Ησιόδφ. Perhaps in the lost work Γ'ης περίοδος. Stein however argues that as lidt, does not name the work there must have been a Hesiodic poem specially on the Hyperboreans.

 Θμήρω. Hdt. questions the Homeric authorship of the Epigoni as in 2.117 of the Cyprin. Mahaffy, G.L. i.² o7, sees in this scepticism the result of "the critical labours of the commission of Peisistratus" (cp. Bergk, Gr. L. i. 508). The Epigani, a poem belonging to the Theban cycle, he ascribes to Antimachos of Teos (cp. Bergk, ii. p. 42). It was a poem of 7000 lines of which only one has come down to us, not concerning the Hyperboreans. To the Homeric pseudepigrapha containing allusion to Hyperboreans is to be added Hym. 6. 28 έλπομαι η Λίγυπτον άφιξεται η έγε Κύπροι | η ès Υπερβορέους η ἐκαστέρω (ed. Gemoll. p. 80). And to the poetical authorities might have been added Finder, Ol. 3. 16 (where the Hyperboreaus seem to be located about the Danube), Puth. 10. 30, Isth. 5. (6.) 23, Erry. 257 (156), and Aischylos, Cheeph. 305.

Hdt. does not here expressly refer to the Arimaspeia of Aristens, though the potential exception in favour of the Isseelones is presumably due to the utilisation of their authority in that poem (ee. 13, 16 supra). Niebuhr (Geography of Hdt. p. 6) regarded Hdt.'s disquisition on the Hyperboreaus a relaying against Heleating, but the as a polemic against Hekataios: but the passage in Diodoros 2. 47 is now generally ascribed to Hekataios of Abdera. The elder Hekataios, however, had pre-sumably mentioned the Hyperboreans, and it is a curious coincidence that the and it is a cultous contendence that the passage in Diodoros adds a tradition about Abaris (c. 36 infra). The traditions in Hesiod and 'Homer' (Epigoni) probably reproduced the Delphic version of the Hyperborean myth, to which Herodotus evidently prefers the Delian.

33. 1. Δήλιοι. The Delian myth of the Hyperboreans (cc. 33-35). Whatever else we have in this legend we seem to have an indication of a great trade-route have an indication of a great trade-route from the north to the religious and commercial centre of the Ionians of early times (ep. Thuc. 3, 104) in the Aegean sea. Some of the stations on this route are indicated. It goes back from Delos to Tenes, Karystes, up through Eubeean waters (the Euripos) to Malis: from Malis overland to Dodona: northward again along the Adriatic coast. A route connects the head of the Adriatic with 'Seythia.' Thence the journey fades away to the north. It was along this line, or along these lines, probably, that the great amber trade was conducted from the Eastern (Baltic) source. But of stations north of Adria no hint has reached Herodotus, or his informants: and it may be doubted whether there is not underlying the saga an unconscious confusion between two routes, from the Baltic to the southern sea, one reaching its waters in the Adriatic, the other in the Pontos. (On the amber trade and its routes see F. Waldmann, Inc. Bernstein im Alterthum, Fellin. 1833.) Whether Phoenicians and 'Karians' (cp. Thue. 1. 4, 8) preceded lonians in the occupation of Delos or not, probably this trade between Delos and the Baltic dates from times long before Ionian and Hellenic occupation. We therefore need not see in the story (with Attinger, Delos, 1887) any memorial of the Hellenic invasion of Delos from the north.

Kallimaches, Hymn. Del. 283 ff. (ed. Meineke), is presumably indebted to Herodotus for the stations mentioned on the route. Pausan. 1. 31, 2 (77) follows a different tradition, according to which the offerings from the Hyperbareans pass to the Arimaspi, Issedones, Seyths; are conveyed by the Seyths to Sinope, and from Sinope to Attien, to the temple of Apollo at Prasiae: the Athenians pass them on to Deles. This story Rawlinson discredits as an invention of Athenian vanity: Crusius Roseher's Lexikon, 2820) traces it to Phanodemos and recognises its Athenian motive. It is on the face of it less primitive than the other, but of course utilises real facts and trading stations. Schubart's emendation, Δωδώνην for Συνώνην, may be dismissed, with Crusius, as a mistaken effort to harmonise Pausanias (Phanodemes) and Herodotus, inter alia because it establishes a connexion between the Hyperborean myth and the cult of Apollo, and deduces the former from the latter. See the admirable article by Crusius in Roscher's Lexikon, sub roc. Hyperboreae.

6. Awswalors. Etym. M. sub v.

9. "Avopov. This boycotting of Andros by its nearest neighbours, Karystos and Tenes, may have been due to commercial or to teligious rivalry. Andros was connected by its colonies Akanthes, Sane, Stageiros, Argiles, with Thrace, and specially addicted to the cult of Dienysos. It pursued at times an independent policy, cp. 8. 111.

11. λέγουσι. We here tap one of Hdt.'s sources. That he visited Delos is morally certain (6, 98 infra). Introduction, § 21. The Delians probably got their information out of their hyumbooks. Cp. Introduction, p. lxxxiv.

12. 800 xópas. There was a certain dualism in the cult at Delos which dated back to the prac-Hellenic days (Hirschfeld, Deutsche Randschau, Oct. 1884), but the sex of the divinities was different as with Apollo-Artemis. The virgins here, like the still more primitive pair c. 36 infra, seem to be Hellenic personifications, or aspects of Artemis.

13. Υπερόχη, praestans, eminens. Λαοδίκη, populi jus: Bachr.

15. Περφερίες θεωροί Hesyeh. According to some etymologists this word contains the key to the mystery. Η ερφερρέτες οτ ἐπέρφοροι, the Bringers of the offering, ὁπέρφοροι becomes ὑπέρβοροι. (Τπερβέρετος a spring month in Krete: Τπερβέρετος a spring month in Macedonia.) A Polksetymologie connects the word with Boreas and creates a mythic land and people "Leyond the north-wind" (Ahrens). This is to be preferred to G. Curtius' suggestion that Τπερβέρετοι - Τπερ(F)δρειοι, the men beyond the mountains (ultramontant).

10. Ipā., πυρῶν can only mean 'offerings tied up in wheaten straw.' What the offerings were is not here said clearly, but they may have consisted in er included firstfruits and offerings in kind. Pausanias 1. 31, 2 pragmatises, τὰς δὲ ἀπαρχὰς κακρέφθαι μὲν ἐν καλάμη πυρῶν γινῶνακοθαι δὲ ὑπ' οὐδένων. In any case they were unbloody offerings, offered to Apollo as a god of agriculture.

35. 3. "Aργη and "Ωπις may also be taken as epithets and duplicates of Artemis. For Arge Pausanias 5. 7, 8 (Pseudo Platon, Axioch. 371 a) has Exalery, an unmistakable title, which it has been proposed to substitute here: but θργος, swift or bright, is perfectly intelligible as applied to the moon-goddess, "Arreas h Bακιληίη, c. 33 supra (= Lucina, Stein). "Ωπις οτ Οίπις is an epithet of Artemis Lucina as Elicithuia, Kallim. Hypm. Itel. 204. Pseudo-P. Le. Cicero, de Nett. Inor. 3. 23, 58, represents Upis as the father of Diana, and adds: eam Graeci saepe Upim paterno nomine appellant. In Ps. Flat. Le. "Ωπις is perhaps masculine (i.e. not Artemis but Apollo).

 6. 35. Pausan. 1. 18, 5.
 7. τὸν ἐτάξαντο φόρον has a curiously official ring about it. One sees how easily religious precedent might be utilised for political purposes. (Cp. 3, 13 φύρον τε ετάξαντο και δώρα επεμπον, and the rubric in the Athenian lists: πόλεις αὐταί ταξάμεναι, Hicks, No. 35, C.I.1. i. 211.)

3. rotor ocore. Apollo and Artemis naturally suggested: but as they did not come to Delos (according to the Delian legend here presupposed) but were born there, we must consider earlier divinities to be here meant, though these earlier divinities are only Apollo and Artemis in earlier forms, perhaps Phoenician as distinguished trom Hellenie. (Crusius, op. cit. 2811, understands it of "Eileithyia Leto and

10. 'Ωλήν. 10. 'Πλήν. Δυμαΐος ή 'Υπερβόρειος ή Λύκιος έποποιάς μάλλον δε Λύκιος άπο Ξάνθου ως δηλοί Καλλίμαχος και ό Πολυloτωρ èν τοῦς περί Λυκίας, Suidas. These variations were probably inferences from the internal evidences of his Hymns. Pausanias is our best authority, and explains the article in Suidss. Paus. I.c. supra; add 5. 7, 8, 8. 21, 3, and 9. 27. 2. A Delphic tradition represented

36. 2. 'Αβάριος. Cp. Harpekration, Suides sub v. Where Hott. heard or read the story of Abaris, which he rejects, he omits to mention; perhaps in Sparta, where the Hyperborean disputed with the Thracian Orpheus the honour of having founded a temple to Κόρη Σωτείρα l'ausan. 3. 13, 2. (That he was worshipped in Sparta I cannot discover. Schreiber in Roscher's Lexikon, sub r.) Perhaps in Pindar's works, who made Abaris contemporary with Kroisos (q.v. Harpokration). Cp. Bentiey, Dissertations, ed. Bohn, pp. 109, 110. Lobeck, Aglaoph. 313 f., assigns as a date for the verses circulated in his name c. Ol. 42 = 612.8 n.c. (cp. article in Pauly, $R \cdot E$, i.² p. 7). Neither is it obvious why Hdt., who admits the story of the eestatic journey of Aristeas, should reject that of Alaris, unless it be that the one is a Greek and the other a Hyperborean.

3. τον οιστόν. Later tradition improved on this, and made the arrow carry Abaris. Iambl. vita Pythong. 19. 28: but perhaps we should boldly read

The mention of the four nations (Persians, Medes, Saspeires, Kolchi) Blakesley, n. 110, explains as due to a commercial route. In 1. 101 the Saspeires speires are expressly said to be the only people between Media and Kolchis. In 3. 94 with the Matieni and Alarodii they make up the eighteenth satrapy. They may be located in Eastern Armenia, but cannot be identified. (Bunbury, Anc. Geogr. i. 245.) Their arms are described in 7. 79, where they appear in company with the Alaredians.

3. Kóλχοι. According to Hdt. 2. 104

of Egyptian origin, which, if anything more than a false inference from the evidence there adduced, may again be taken as indicating commercial relations

There is no reason to doubt that Hilt, conceives these tribes in a line due north: he could signify N.W. if he wished to do so.

38. 1. arral & L. & S. take of the N. and S. coasts of Asia Minor. Hdt.'s meaning is plain. One dary is made up of Asia Minor with thirty nations (c. 38), the other, as he conceives it, is made up of Persia, Assyria, and Arabia, containing only three nations (c. 39). άκτη as thus used by Hdt, seems to mean a process or elongation of the continent larger than a xepotenoos, and perhaps without a clear isthmus. But see Bachr

3. 7d mpds $\beta$. The north side of the first darif extends from the Phasis to Sigeion. Can it be that Hdt, places the Phasis too far south, and on the north-east corner of the peninsula? Signion is situated at the S. exit of the Hellespont, which, as Stein points out, includes here the Propontis and Bosporos (cp. 1, 57, 4, 76, 96, 193, 5, 103, 6, 26, 33, 7, 197).

8. τριήκοντα. It is possible to bring together 30 names from the list of atrapies 3, 90 or from the Army list 7, 72-80, 91-95, but the names will not exactly coincide. 1.28, called in to clucidate, is of doubtful authenticity. See Rawlinson for a probable list. But the method of systematising the geography or geographical passages and remarks in the work of Herodotus, without allowing for the differences of source and interest, is unsound.

39. 2. ή ελ δη έτέρη. Hit. had plainly no conception of the existence of the Persian Gulf, no knowledge of the true lie of the Arabian peninsula, or he would not have included \(\eta\) Hepox\(\text{\eta}\) in this second derή, nor would be have projected the derή as running along towards the west. The Arabian Gulf and Egypt conventionally terminate this darn; yet Hdt. seems to propose that Egypt and Libya should be included in it. It is obvious by the way that he has no conception of the real shape of Africa, and probably conceives it as recembling Asia Minor, cp. c. 42 infra, and Appendix XII.

5. vópo Hdt. then is following some authority and will not quite break with convention in his geography. authority is perhaps Ionian, his dissent

5. § Kaomin. Hdt, must have full credit for the assertion that the Caspian is an inland sea, but it must also be is an incase sea, but it must also be admitted that he appears to think its greater length lies E. and W. Of the Sea of Aral he knows nothing. To suppose that in his day the two formed one is violent. Time was undoubtedly when the whole 'Aralo-Caspian Depression' was part of a greater inland sea extending from the Euxine to the Frozen Ocean (cp. Stanford's Compendium, Europe, p. 168, Asia, pp. 400, 408-9), but one might almost as well suppose that those geographers, who made the Caspian an arm of the ocean, followed an historical tradition, as that the separation of the Caspian and the Aral occurred in historic times, and indeed since the days of Herodotus, as some commentators appear willing to do. Aral is appearently more in the nature of a great lake, being fed by the Oxus and the Sir, while the Caspian, which lies nearly 250 feet lower, is a real relic of o'Apasas is here a river east of the Caspian, and flowing towards the E. away from the Caspian. In 1, 202 it is a river rising in Matiene and having one mouth emptying into the Caspian, and thirty-nine others, which lose themselves in marshes. It forms the southern frontier of the Massagetre. It is said to be both greater and smaller than the Danube. The simplest hypothesis which explains these inconsistencies is the supposition that under the same mane are conformed two for more) totally different rivers, the Kurwhich rises in Matiene and flows E. into the Caspian, and one of the great rivers of central Asia E. of the Caspian, the Oxus, or Jaxartes, which however flow north-vectiverels into the Aral. To suppose that Hdt. meant here to write westward and wrote castward by a slip, is to assume that Hdt. was accurately informed on the region, a thing not probable. In c. Il suppose an Araxes is the boundary between the former land of the Soyths and Kimmeria. It is of course possible that the errors or inconsistencies arose, in the first instance, from the confusion of various streams under one generic name, as might happen with our own Avons and Ouses.

Europe, is vastly greater than the other two, Asia and Libya, put together; so extensive indeed as to have been only partially explored. Europe is separated from Asia by the line of the l'ontes, Phosis, Caspian, and Araxes.

Hdt. disregards alike the boundary laid down by Hekataios, viz. the Tanais (c. 45 infra) and the modern boundary of the Ural mountains and river, which, however, is neither physically nor politically defensible (cp. Stanford's Europe, pp. 2 ff.): Siberia and central Asia, so far as known to him, are reckoned to his Europe. In this again, there is a certain accidental anticipation of modern geography, which views the geographical boundary between Asia and Europe as purely conventional. Regarded from a strictly geographical view, "Europe is after all only a peninsula of Asia" (Stanford's Europe, p. 1, and press.). If Hdt. had only made Europe instead of Libya an deri of Asia!

characteristic of Hdt.'s methods that this important act of Necho's reign, which was no doubt a piece of his policy of maritime aggrandisement, should come in here by a side wind: but the record, for that very reason, is the more trustworthy. Cp. Introduction, p. lxxi.

This injunction of Necho's does not in the least prove that the form of Libya was then already known, or even the fact of its pen-insularity and therefore that this was not the first circumnavigation (pace G. 18. τον ήλιον. This assertion that the circumnavigators of Libya had the sun to the north of them (for a time), has generally been taken as a conclusive argument of the reality of this voyage, the rather because Hdt. disbelieves it. Blakesley, in a highly ingenious note 128, disputes the argument, and represents the statement as an inference made by analogy from the northern hemisphere. Against the incredulity of Blakesley we may set the fact that Africa is circumnavigable, and the consideration that an actual circumnavigation even in Necho's time was a possibility. Hdt., be it observed, does not disbelieve the circumnavigation to have taken place. His authority for the story was perhaps Aegypto - Hellenie. Herodotus, by the way, evidently conceives Libya as a sort of parallelogram, the longer sides of which run E. and W. Cp. e. 41 supra et al. The plain meaning of this passage has been frequently mismad. So e.g. [G. W.] apud Rawlinson thinks what Hdt. discredited was an assertion that in sailing to the north the sailor had the sunries on his right: so, too, P. Gaffarel, Endove de Cysique, etc. Besingon 1873, p. 40.

15. Zohous. Cp. 2. 32. The only spot on the Atlantic shore of Africa named by Hdt. He makes it the most westerly point of the continent; this would lead us to identify it with Cape Verde. On the other hand the voyage of Sataspes steers south from Soloeis, after passing Gibraltar; this would lead us to identify Soloeis with Cape Spartel, near Tangier (see G. W.'s note in Rawlinson, vol. ii. p. 49). But again Soloeis in Hanno, Skylax, and Ptolemy is undoubtedly Cape Cantin (see Bunbury, i. p. 329), the importance of which was exaggerated in antiquity. It seems therefore that we must return to Rennell's view that Soloeis is Cape Cantin, but add, with Bunbury, that though Hdt. was acquainted with the name he had no definite idea of its true geographical position (cp. cit. p. 288).

Pol. 4. 14, 3, 1332b quotes Skylax on the Indians. The Periplus which has come down to us is certainly a pseudepigraphon of much later date. (Muller, Geogr. Minares, ed. Didot, i. pp. xxxiii-li., 15-96.)

Kaomarvoov. See Sayee on 3. 102, who identifies it, as do most authorities, with Kabul. Rawlinson questions this (note to 3. 102) on the ground that Hdt. places the city on the Indus: as if Hdt. were incapable of a geographical error! Buchr, indeed, argues that Hdt. does not expressly locate the start on the Indus.

Later writers, including those of Imperial times, recurred to the Tansis as the boundary (ep. Polybius, 3, 37, 3, Pomp. Mela, lib. 2, ad inst.). We have here a reminissence of the river frontiers are being the second of the se frontiers, perhaps of the island-theory, of the continents. Cp. Berger, Gersh, d. wissenschaft. Erdkunde, pp. 05 ff.

Hdt. is correct in giving prominence to the river system of Seythia, or South Russia, a region which not only includes some of the greatest rivers of Europe, but also has common features, arising from the large scale and homogeneity of the country drained by those rivers. But Hdt.'s statements reveal the limitations of his knowledge. Three of the rivers cannot be identified: and though the Wolga does not belong to the Scythia of Hdt., the absence of any clear reference here, or elsewhere, to the largest Russian or European river can only be put down to blameless ignorance (cp. cc. 124, 125 in/ra). In regard to six of the rivers Hdt. adopts what may be called a Lake-origin theory. That he called a Lake-origin theory. That he rejects the rival theory of the Rhipaean mountains, to which even Aristotle relapses (Meleor. 1. 13, 35% όπ' αὐτήν δέ την άρκτον ὑπὸρ τῆς ἐσχάτης Σκυθίας at καλούμεναι 'Ι'ίπαι, περί ων του μεγίθους λίαν είσιν οι λεγόμενοι λόγοι μυθώδεις· ρέουσι δ' οίν οι πλείστοι και μέγιστοι μετά τον Ιστρον των άλλων ποταμών έντειθεν or pages) may be put down to his credit; but though Russia contains the largest lakes in Europe, they have nothing to do with the rivers of the south, most of which, however, "agree in having their sources in comparatively low-lying regions amid a labyrinth of waters" (Stanford, Europe, p. 177). Some are auxious to see in these marshy labyrinths the Lakes of Herodotus, and even suppose physical transfor-mation scenes since his day to enhance his credit: it is more natural to recognise that his information is imperfect or incorrect.

48. 1. "Iorpos µiv. The Istros and its tributaries (ec. 48-50). To complete the Herodotean conceptions of the course of the Danube 2, 33, 34 must be read in connexion with the present passage. From that context the following items may be added: (1) the rise of the Dan-nbe, by the 'city' Pyrene, in the land of the Kelts, beyond the Pillars of Herakles. (2) The course of the river through the whole length of Europe (διά πάσης Εὐφώπης), bar the territory of the Kynesii west of the Kelts, dividing the continent into two (equal) parts (μέσην σχίζων την Εύρωπην, a statement which, if pressed, conflicts with the ignorance of north Europe e. 45 supra, but μέσην may be fairly taken as a loose expression: cp. μέσον σχίζων τον Αμων c. 40, l. 8 in/ra). (3) The exact location of the embouchure of the river beside the Milesian colony of Istriu in the 'meridian' of Sinepe (sic), Kilikia aspera and Egypt. Whether these data are more remarkable for the knowledge than for the ignorance displayed in them is a fair question. The sources of the Danube, which rises in the Black Forest, are located much too far west: the ignorance of the Rhone, not to mention other streams, implied in Hdt,'s description of the course of the river, is surprising. It is plain that Hdt. rightly conceives the Danube as running from W. to E. and he apparently ceneeives it as bending to the south (so as to form the W. boundary of Seythia, ep. 5. 3 infra) though it bends again to the E. (ep. c. 99 infra). The final bend eastwards is correct enough. The previous bend, if Hdt.'s conception is rightly interpreted, is wholly misconceived: a confusion between the Danube and the Pruth perhaps underlies the misconception. (4) The observation of the absence of flood on the lower Danube is correct, but the explanation is not according to knowledge. The true cause is to be sought in the action of that monster Stried, 'the Iron Gates,' which serve as a valve and equalise the flow of water by flooding the plain of Hungary. Cp. c. 50 infra.

A μεγάλοι. An easy way of reconciling lidt, with the facts is to read ob μεγάλοι, but it rests on the erroneous supposition that lidt, must have had accurate information even on such outlandish points. The six rivers next mentioned cannot be satisfactorily identified. Hansen, Ost-Europa, $$ 90, 100, suggests the rearrangement of the passage, so that ἐσβάλλουσι. Τοβισις should follow Ἰστρφ. αὐτὸν then refers to the Matis, and instead of six there are only three tributaries of the Danube to be accounted for, the Matis and its tributaries representing "the system of the Theiss." On this theory the text must further run: ἐκ δὲ τοῦ λίμου . . ῥέοντες διά Ορρίκης κτλ. and the displacement, as Hansen suggests, may have been facilitated by the rescubbance of ʿAτλas and 'λθρυς. Ingenious rather than convincing, this suggestion again is open to the same objection as the tormer.

10. Τριβαλλικόν. The Triballi occupied the modern Servia and perhaps extended into Hungary (πεδίον). But the two rivers are again not to be iden-tified with certainty. The tribe was strong enough to resist the Odrysian power, and Sitalkes met his death in an expedition against them, 424 n.c. Thuc.
4. 101, 5. This event perhaps brought the name forward at Athens, and ten years later Aristophanes has his laugh at their expense (Birds, 1533 et al.). In the Carpis and Alpis which swell the Danube from the region 'north of Umbria' most persons will be content to see a strange dissolution of the Carpathians and Alps from mountains into rivers. The waters from those ranges do augment the Danube; but lidt,'s statements can hardly rank as real

5. toos ald. This statement is not correct, as the Danube and its principal tributaries are subject to great and dis-astrous floods. It is however approxi-mately true of the main stream below Belgrade, for a reason given infra.

8. Veras. This statement is true of Scythia, and the modern Moldavia, Galicia, and Bukowina (Europe, p. 186), but not of the whole 'catchment basin' of the Danube. The real cause why the lower Danube preserves its volume unaugmented is, as stated c. 48 supra, the obstructions in "the bed of the stream below Belgrade, which regulate the stream at the cost of deluging the country above " (see Stanford's Europe, p. 155). These obstructions are now in process of reduction: and presumably in future the floods will be carried off by the channel instead of inundating the Hungarian lowland. Cp. Geogr. Journal, i. 213 ff. (1893).

23. Δήμητρος. A deity proper to a population cultivating cereals. The reading of a is Μητρός which Bachr prefers, regarding Δήμητρος as a gloss. The worship of Kybele was widespread on the shores of Pontos. An inscription of Panticapaeum has Μητρί Φρυγία C. I. G. ii. No. 2107, and Rawlinson prints a coin of Olbia which shows a mural crown, emblem of Kybele: but oddly enough the wreath of corn, emblem of Demeter, is combined with it. The mural crown is found on representations of the Aphrodite of Askalon and Kypros, vid. Perrot and Chipiez, Art of Phoenicia, ii. 49. B. Head, Hist. Num. p. 293, gives the head of Demeter as the p. 233, gives the head of Demeter as the principal type of the gold and silver coinage of Olbia. We are perhaps in presence of a 'contaminated' cult. Cp. Strabo, p. 469, and c. 76 infra.

tion, as do the Hypakyris and Gerrhos. It is conceivable that these difficulties may be due to great changes in the physique of the country, and that Hdt. may be unimpeachable: it is also possible that "Hdt. may have been completely at fault": considering his circumstances, the latter is the less violent hypothesis of the two—which are not, however, mutually exclusive. Hdt. has made many mistakes, and physical changes have made it doubly difficult for us to correct those mistakes. Perhaps there were three streams to be crossed by the com-mercial travellers between the Dniepr and the Don.

This, which was the most celebrated, is a narrow strip of land (now broken into two, or more, islands) extending about oniles, between the mouth of the Dniepr and the Crimea (vid. Smith, Daiepr and the Crimea (vid. Smith, Dict. George. p. 20), and connected with the Hylaca (c. 76 infra) by an isthmus. (Neumann, Die Helleurn im Skythendande, pp. 265 ff.) It may have looked like a colossal stadium, lit for the swift-footed hero, whose cult was popular on the coast. Cp. especially Strabo, 307.

56. 1. Fépois. The Gerrhos is the most bewildering of the Scythian rivers. It is an off-shoot of the Dniepr, which

It is an off-shoot of the Uniepr, which leaves that river forty days up from the a.a. flows to the east and south, forms the boundary between the Nomad and Royal Scyths, and then empties itself into the unknown Hypakyris, instead of finding its way to the sea, or the Tanais. It has the same name as the land, and the people are Gerrhii. Stein suggests that the name may mean 'Border,' 'Borderland,' 'Borderers': that the border may have followed, at least in parts, the course of a stream or streams

(the Donetz, Syrgis, in the cast), and that in this way a confusion and error arose. Anyway the inference is plain that Hdt. is neither a first-hand nor a first-rate authority on the rivers of Seythia, although that be his best chapter on Seythian geography. Op Appendix II. 57. 2. Távaïs. The Tanais or Don, "mere than half as long again as the Rhine" (Europe, p. 179), formed with Hekataios the frontier between Europe and Asia (on a 45 suggest) but with and Asia (ep. c. 45 supra), but with Hdt. only a part of the eastern or N.E. limit of Scythia, c. 21 supra. 2. vópasa is taken in apposition to τά λοιπά, as, more commonly, with άλλος, ep. c. 61 infra. This is ingenious, but in any case the sense and even the terms of the sentence carry back to c. 46, before the excursus on the rivers. τὰ μέγιστα there resultines το μέγιστον there, and even econopa here may be an echo of aποροι c. 46 ad fin. dates from about the rise of El-Islam,' R. F. Burton, The Book of the Sword, p. 227. In this passage (cc. 62-66) Hdt. takes for granted a political organisation of the Seyths which unfortunately he nowhere describes in detail. There are applya, perhaps to be identified with the parthua, and if so, probably three in number, subdivided into roμοί (like Egypt 2. 4, 42, etc.), number not stated, each under a roμάρχης, e. 66 infra. As each rouds has an image of the war-god it was perhaps connected with the military organisation and mobilisation. The parakers reserves the distribution of the spoil and jurisdiction. Cp. c. 64 infra. All this implies considerable local settlement and organisation, to a degree inconsistent with the merely nomadic Scythia of the ensuing narrative. It would be an excess of rationalism to argue to a political development in Soythia between the dates of the invasion of Darcios and of the visit of Herodotus, a development of which the historian betrays no consciousness: it is altogether simpler to add the inconsistency to the evidence in favour of a 'contamination' of sources, and against the historic character of the narrative. Cp. Introduction, $ 16, III.

We gather from them that Herodotus had not seen any of these piles, but took the exaggerated accounts of certain mendacions Seythians. How a country alwas declor was to furnish such cuormous piles of brushwood, he forgets to ask himself." O si sic omnia! But there is no sufficient reason for thinking that Herodotus had these accounts from Seythians. Cp. Introduction, § 20. 9. σιδήρεος. The sword in the σιδήρεος. "The sword in the great temb at Kertch was [sic] of iron, so that Herodotus is perhaps not mistaken" R. Cp. Schrader (tr. Jevons), Prehistoric Antiquities, p. 203, Antiquide la Russic mérid. p. 182.

This is endorsed by Stein and Abieht, who adds that rocotô' is a 'Dative of Difference': whatever that may be. Perhaps Herodotus means: 'they sacrifica to Area, though me to the other fice to Ares, though not to the other gods, victims in great numbers as follows.' Wine must have been imported. this annual drink was connected with the sacrifice there described. It was perhaps these drinking bouts which carned the Scyths a bad reputation, especially with each hero drinking from two cups at the same time! cp. 6. 64 infra. All the more remarkable is the doctrine or criticism on Barchos ascribed to the Scyths, c. 79 infra.

7. σύνδυο κύλικας... ὁμοῦ. Schweig, originally followed Valckenaer in rendering juncta bina pocula habentes, but afterwards adopted the version above given, which has been followed by Baehr, Kruger, Stein, and others. The statement, then, cannot be accepted quite literally. Could the meaning be that the drinkers in question have cups twice as big as those of the others, which are filled and emutical just as often?

as big as those of the others, which are filled and emptied just as often?

The rhabdomancy of the Scythians approaches witcheraft, and had probably nothing to say to their $\textit{\textit{e}}\text{conf}$. They are three shift had in in

There are three chief theories in regard to the Onleia voicos, that it was a vice, that it was a malady of the body, that it was a mental affliction. The three are one. The whole question is exhaustively treated in Rosenbaum's Gesch. der Lustsenche im Alterthume, pp. 141-219. Bouhier, Recherches, etc. (1746), e. xx. is still worth consulting. Hansen, Ost-Europa, § 223, suggests that Hippokrates (de Aere, §§ 107 fl.) in his polemic against the superstitious (supernatural) explana-tion of the Scythian impotence has Hdt. (1, 105) in memory. But it is not certain that Hdt. was the only or the carliest authority for that story, and the combination of facts implied in it.

68. 2. ὁ Σκυθίων. Curious, as there were three kings, op. cc. 65 supra, 102, 120 infra.

5. tortas. The plural here is explained by Stein as referring to the polygamy of the king, who might have as many hearths as wives: or is it not rather due to there being several kings? Or is it, perhaps, connected with the worship of the dead kings? (R. renders it as singular: and so too Macaulay.)

8. διαλελαμμένος = έκατέρωθεν λελομ-μένος. Cp. διαλαβείν 1, 114, certainly more explicit than the commoner σελλα-βείν. Aristoph. Eccles. 1000 has δια-λελημμένον of a person held by two others, one on either side.

of memorialising the act of troth by a vivid ceremony. Cp. Robertson Smith, Religion of the Semiles, pp. 200 ff. and esp. Trumbull, The Black Covenant (New York, 1885), cited ibid.

ment is not quite conclusive, seeing that the second ground implies a curate know-ledge, and the first implies systematic exposition, two characteristics which Hdt. does not possess. There is also the possibility of reading reoreparatiera for тевберакогта in c. 53 зарта. Nevertheless the phrase comes in here very unnecessarily, the passage reads better without it, and it may very well be a grammarian's insertion.

22. ἀργίρφ. When Blakesley says that "this must mean that they do not use either silver or bronze in commerce, for their arms would doubtless be of the latter" he acquits Hdt. of an error by making bim guilty of an inconsequence—commerce not being here on the tapis. The obvious meaning is that silver and bronze (cups) were not included in the royal tombs.

72. I. iviavrov. How nomads measured the year Herodotus does not directly or indirectly indicate. (Cp. c. 98 infra.) That the ghastly description which follows is not all a mere traveller's tale is proved inter alia by S. Lee, lim Batnta, London, 1829, p. 220. Blakesley, note ad l., quotes (without references) the Arabian traveller's report of the burial of the Khan of the Tartars, and also a remarkable parallel in the description of a Patagonian funeral reported by Fitzroy, Narrative of the Bengle, ii. 155.

It is interesting to compare the quiet way in which Hdt, reports this spectrele with the rhapsody in which Neumann, op. c. pp. 233 f., repels indignantly the herible suggestion that the Scythian custom here described has some analogy with primitive German practices.

It is not to be supposed for one moment that Hdt. himself beheld either this rite or its objects. Unfortunately we do not know exactly whon the last Seyth 'King' died before Hdt. wrote the Seythian Logi, or how long it was since a proper opportunity had been afforded of celebrating a King's obsequies, or getting a special report of them.

apparently seen one or more of these Thracian Himstia, and perhaps not being a connoisseur had mistaken it for linen, until the difference was pointed out to him. Thracians were to be found out of Thrace, and the Scythian cannabis was presumably exported: in any case the passage proves nothing in regard to Hdt. in Scythia. 3. 'Ανάχαρσις. Bachr and Holder read 'Αναχάρσις and Σχύλη not without MSS. authority, and certainly with literary force. Anacharsis (ep.e. 46 supra) became to the Greeks the type of an intelligent foreigner, and (like Goldsmith's Chinese citizen, et simil. mutatis suprandis) the mounth prices of a great mutandis) the mouth-piece of a great deal of criticism on things Hellenic, His figure has had a long life in litera-ture from Herodotus and Plato to Lucian, Stobacus, Suidas and Abbé Jean Jacques Barthélemy (Voyage du jeune Annehorsis en Grece, Paris 1788). He was represented as a contemporary and friend of Solon, Periandros, and the Laconism Myson (cp. Plat. Protag. 343), as one of the visitors to Kroises, as a poet, letterwriter, and inventor (see esp. Suidas, sub v., Cierto, Tusc. 5. 32, Dieg. L. 1. 105). A number of

Anacharsis was still perhaps remembered and spoken of in Kyzikos as was Aristeas (c. 14 supra), but Hdt. would not have had to go to Kyzikos to hear his romantic story, and Kyzikos might have been introduced into the story as the place where Anacharsis would probably have seen the ritual of Kybelein his time therefore unknown in Scythia (cp. c. 53 supra), even though the Phoenician Aphrodite had reached that shore, c. 59 supra. Kyzikos was one of the chief centres of the worship of the Mother, who had a temple on Mount Dindymon close by the town (Strabo, 575): not to be confounded with the greater mountain of the same name, in Galatia, or ancient Phrygia, by Pessinus, the chief seat of the Asiatic Mother (Agelistis or Dindymene, ep. 1. 50). Doubtless at Kyzikos the cultus was of a highly orgiastic kind. The Μητρώου at Athens was dedicated to the same goddess, and Prelier, Gr. Myth. i. 2 p. 537, very plausibly suggests that the introduction of the cult at Athens may be connected with the age and policy of Peisistrates: any way it was not at Athens that Anacharsis was initiated. Perhaps the more orginstic rite was not popular at Athens until after the Peloθεών ἀνάγοντας τοὺς Κυζικηνούς όρτην μεγαλοπρεπέως κάρτα, εύξατο τη μητρί ὁ 'Ανάχαρσις, ην σως καὶ ύγιης ἀπονοστήση ές έωυτοῦ, θύσειν τε κατά ταὐτά κατά ώρα τοὺς Κυζικηνοὺς ποιεῦντας καὶ παυνυχίδα στήσειν. ώς δὲ ἀπίκετο ές τὴν Σκυθικήν, 10 καταδύς ές την καλεομένην 'Υλαίην (ή δ' έστι μεν παρά τον Αχιλλήτου δρόμου, τυγχάνει δὲ πᾶσα ἐοῦσα δευδρέωυ παυτοίων πλέη), ες ταύτην δη καταδύς ό 'Ανάχαρσις την όρτην επετέλεε πάσαν τη θεώ, τύμπανόν τε έχων καλ εκδησάμενος άγάλματα. καὶ τῶν τις Σκυθέων καταφρασθείς αὐτὸν ταῦτα ποιεῦντα ἐσήμηνε 15 τώ βασιλέι Σαυλίω· ό δὲ καὶ αὐτὸς ἀπικόμενος ώς είδε τὸν 'Ανάγαρσιν ποιεθντα ταθτα, τοξεύσας αθτον ἀπέκτεινε. καὶ νθν ήν τις είρηται περί 'Αναχάρσιος, ού φασί μιν Σκύθαι γινώσκειν, διά τούτο ότι έξεδήμησε τε ές την Ελλάδα και ξεινικοίσι έθεσι διεχρήσατο. ώς δ' έγω ήκουσα Τύμνεω τοῦ 'Αριαπείθεος έπιτρό- 20 που, είναι αὐτὸν Ἰδανθύρσου τοῦ Σκυθέων βασιλέος πάτρων, παίδα δὲ είναι Γνούρου τοῦ Λύκου τοῦ Σπαργαπείθεος. εὶ ὧν ταύτης ην της οἰκίης ὁ ᾿Ανάχαρσις, ἴστω ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀδελφεοῦ

10. παννυχίδα. In later days he might have assisted at such a celebration in Athens, ep. Aristoph. Frogs 371, 445, and Plato, Frog. 328; and for a similar night-watch ep. the Egyptian celebration described 2. 62 and the λαμπαδηφορία 8. 98.

18. οδ φασί μιν Σκύθαι. It is evident, therefore, that Hdt. did not get the story from a Scythian source, and evident further that Tymnes was no Seyth. The name occurs twice again in Hdt. as that of the father of a Histiaios of Termera in Karia (5. 38, 7. 98), very near Halikarnassos Hdt.'s native city. Where Hdt. met and conversed with this Tymnes, he does not say, but it need not have been in Seythia: it is not even certain that the interpower of Tymnes involved residence in Seythia, or was excreised there, although a probability to that effect may exist. 24. 'ISáv9vpros, c. 120 infra. If Anacharsis was his father's brother, and so a contemporary of Kyros, he might possibly have been a friend of Solon's. Dieg. L. 1. 101 and Suislas give the name of the brother as Kaðovíðas. Lucian makes the father's name Δαυκέτης (South. 1) γένους του δοκιμωτάτου εντα και έν τοις πρώτοις Σκυθών. Hdt. soums to have a doubt whether Saulios was really his brother.

77. 1. ήκονσα. Hdt. does not actually say that he heard this anecdote in say that he heard this anecdote in Sparta, but internal considerations point to a Spartan origin. There was some tradition at Sparta of a visit from Seythia in the days of Kleomenes (ep. 6. 84 infra); and Greeks had a way of making foreigners the vehicles of their criticisms on one another, cp. 1. 153, 2. 160, and perhaps cc. 79, 142 injen. Hdt.'s visit to Sparta is certain.

5. ἀσχόλους είναι ές πάσαν σοφίην, "occupied in the pursuit of every kind of knowledge" R.: "busied about every kind of eleverness" Macaulay ("beflissen nach jeglicher Art von Weisheit " Bachr). These translations must all be wrong, the point of the anecdote being to exilt the wisdom (dofrat re nai disastat λόγον) as well as the virtue (σωφρώνως) of the Spartans. άσχόλους είναι means: 'to have no leisure.' The Greeks were all too busy to attend to higher (unpractical) matters, socia and supposity, with the exception of the Lacedar-monians. (Cp. L. & S. sub w. doxodia, aoxolos.)

6. Souvai . . Adyov. Plutarch's 'A noφθέγματα Λακωνικά and Λακαίνων 'Απος ". are monuments of Spartan powers in this line, and Hdt. himself supplies us with not a few examples: e.g. 5, 51, 72, 6, 50, 67-76 infra. Spartan ability did not extend to making set orations (ep. Thue, 4, 84), although Thucydides has put a long speech or two into the mouths of Spartans (1. 80-86, 4. 17-21, 85-88). Cp. 6. 86 infra.

78. 2. πολλοίσι κτλ. One cannot but regret the indefiniteness of this date, for an event which belongs to Hdt.'s own time: cp. Introduction, § 16.

b. 'Ιστριηνής. Of Istria. No doubt from the Istria mentioned in 2. 33 ad f. as a colony of Miletos at the mouth of the Danube (Istres). It was on the S. or Thracian side. From the particularity with which the wives of Arriapeithes are distinctibled from one another (this Greek led), the from one another (this Greek lady, the Scythian wife Opoie, and the Thracian), one might argue that Hdt. is correcting some popular error on the subject, the rather as Opeic and Orikos have nothing to do in the story. The taking to wife the deceased king's wives or one of them, might have a political significance. Cp. 2 Sam. 16, 20 ff.

upper body (female), while the griffin has a bind's head (eagle): in each case the re-mainder being supplied by the lion. The sphinx was originally at home in Egypt : where the colossus at Gizeh, though perhaps 'older than Menes,' still excites the astonishment of travellers. A vast number of sphinxes, dating from the time of Amenophis I, formed, and forms, an avenue from the gate of Luxor to the great temple. The Egyptian sphinx is, however, not female (Egyptian Neb = the Lord, cp. 2, 175), and not winged. In both these respects the Greek differs morphologically from the Egyptian, and the difference is presumably due to Asiatic influences, at least in part. The sphinx appears on the coinage of Chios, in especial, as symbolical of the cult of Dionysos (cp. Gardner, Tupes, iv. 6, x. 13, B. Head, Historia, p. 513). The sphinx of Thebes is a more distinctly mythological creature, but her part in the story of Oedipus may possibly not be older than the Dramatists (Baumeister, p. 1688). The name sphinx is pure Greek (cp. L. & S. sub voc.): the Bocotian monster proper, 4th (Hesiod, Theog. 326) may have been originally quite unlike the later sphinx.

Griffin, \(\gamma\rho\psi\psi\), is probably like sphinx a good Greek or Indo-German word, the derivation from Hebrew kerdb being no longer admitted (A. Furtwangler, in Roscher's Lexikon, pp. 1742 ff., from whom what follows is mainly taken). Morphologically the griffin is a composite of lion and eagle (generally the head and wings of eagle on lion's body). Originally it is a distinctly Asiatic monster, not Egyptian: its elements are found in Chablaca and Assyria, and above all in 'Hittite' art. In Greece it is seen distinctly in the works of Mykenaean art, apparently used for purely decorative purposes. At a later time the figure is associated with Apollo: and it is to be inferred, from later Athenian coins, that the ancient temple figure of Apollo at Delos had two griffins, rampant, one on either side (op. c. 1761). In the coinage of Teos, and of its colony Abdera (founded 544 s.c. Hdt. 1. 168), the griffin appears in especial connexion with Dionyses. Cp. Gardner, Types, xvi. 9, 10, B. Head, Historia, pp. 511, 219. The griffin may signify divine power, and may be supposed to guard divine places, treasures, etc. Mythologically the monster was poorly treated, and had no such story as the sphinx. Hesiod appears to have introduced the griffin into Greek poetry, and Aristeas (cp. c. 13 supra), perhaps working upon some native Seythian legend of gold-guarding monsters (Furtwangler, op. c. 1760), located the griffins in the far north (Hdt. 3. 116, 4. 13), and made their function the protection of the gold against the Arimaspi.

As when a Gryfon through the Wilderness Pursues the Arimaspian, who by stellh Had from his wakeful custody perioind The guarded Gold. Paradise Lett, 2, 943 ff.

This is the story rejected by Hdt. Ktesias thought to improve matters by transferring them to India, Indica 12, where he describes the animals: δριτα τετράποδα, μέγεδος δσον λύκος σκέλη καθ δυνχες, οΙάπερ λέων, τὰ ἐν τῷ ἀλλω σώματι πτερά, μέλανα, ἐρυθρὰ δὲ τὰ ἐν τῷ στιθει. This may be in the main an ulternative to the story in Hdt. 3. 102 ff. and is chiefly valuable as showing Ktesias at work. A 'variety' of the griffin also appears on the gold coins of Pantikapaion: "griffin holding spear in jaws treading on ear of corn," Gardner, Types, vii. 42; ep. B. Head, Historia, p. 230. His index describes this as a "goldguarding" griffin. The date is c. 350 μ.c. 9. Ιπετέλεσο. This conduct betrayed

9. Increase: This conduct betrayed an imperfect acquaintance with Hellenic use, according to which such a contretemps would have suspended a ceremony whether secular or religious.

10. φασι. This might have been put down as one of the Apothegus of Anacharsis were he himself not open to the same charge. Considering, however, the reputation of the Scyths for ακρητοποσία and their addiction to hemp-intoxication, this remark reads more like the criticism of a sophistic Greek than a genuine Scythic comment gleaned by Hdt. at first hand in Scythia.

iξευρίσκευ. It would have been better according to them to have ignored the existence of such a deity.

12. διεπρήστευσε. An άπαξ λεγ. (vox nihili, L. & S.), but almost certainly the true reading, the MSS, giving διεπρήστενε, έπρήστενσε, διεπίστενσε, and Stein's emendation being far the happiest Stein's emendation being far the happiest (Al. διεδρήστευε, διεδρηπέτευσε, διεδρηπέτευσε, διεδρηπέτευσε, διεδρηπέτευσε, διεδρη έντειθεν < ἐνθεῖτεν †>). Stein explains the word as a popular expression ("aus der detben Volkssprache") meaning probably 'taunt,' 'chaff' (höhnen, spotten).

10. θίασος, 'procession.

80. 3. Τήρτω. It is a little curious that Teres and Sitalkes should be named here as though they were well-known persons who required no introductions, their names speaking for themselves. When Thucydides (2. 29) has occasion to mention Teres he adds: o de Thons ouros o τοῦ Σιτάλκου πατήρ πρώτος Οδρύσαις τήν μεγάλην βασιλείαν ἐπὶ πλεῖον τῆς ἄλλης Οράκης ἐποίησε. Thuc, indeed has so little confidence in his readers that he thinks it necessary to guard against a possible confusion between Teres, father of Sitalkes, and Tereus, husband of Prokne! Blakesley, referring to 7, 137, argues that 7. 137 was written before Sitalkes became notorious; that this notoriety was acquired after Sitalkes joined the Athenian alliance, which he did in the first year of the Peloponnesian war; and that this passage was written after 7. 137. If that were so, this passage would be one of the last additions to the work of Hdt. by the author, though, as Si-talkes cannot be supposed to be dead, it would have been added before 3, 160. But the notoriety of Sitalkes and Teres dated long before the Peloponnesian war; it would be strange if this passage inserted here, referring to events certainly prior to the extradition of Nikolaos and Aneristos, had been obtained and inserted by Hdt. after the passage in Bk. 7, and Blakesley's argument overlooks the possibility of the two stories being from possibility of the two stories being from different and independent sources, the terminology of which Hdt. has adopted.

7. ἐπὶ τῷ Ἱστρῳ. Inferentially the boundary between Seythia and Thracia.

9. ἐξ μέν μεν τῆς ἀδελφέῆς παῖς.
Sitalkes, son and successor of Teres, was mother's brother (avunculus) to Oktamasades, the Thracian mother of Oktamasades being apparently full sister to Sitalkos. In any case his connexion with Skyles was remote, the latter being son of a Greek lady. (Stein oddly makes Sitalkes "mutterlicher Oheim Beider, des Skyles und des Oktamasades.") He died in 424 n.c. Thue. 4. 101.

10. ἀδελφεόν. Possibly as Stein suggests Sparadokes, Thuc. 2. 101, whose sen Seuthes succeeded, 4. 101.

18. out M. Hdt. we may suspect draws hardly the full and correct moral of this story. Oktamasades is a near relative to Sitalkes. The two relatives are each holding a throne, the one as pretender, the other against a pretender, both anyway against possible rivals: and each by an exchange of prisoners has it in his power to secure his own possession. In the dethronement of Skyles there is much apparently of dynastic intrigue and personal quarrel, though prejudice may have been raised against him as 'Hellenic.' Even this feeling may have had as much policy as religion in it. Co. Introduction, $22.

it. Gp. Introduction, § 22.

81. I. ἐγενόμην, i.e. when I was making my inquiries;—when, where, and from whom he made inquiry, Hdt. unfortunately does not say. Such omissions are to be ascribed not to a wish on the historian's part to exaggerate his own authority, but rather to a certain laxity in his canons of evidence; cp. Introduction § 20 in his canons of evidence; cp. introduction, § 20.

3. ἀς Σκόθας είναι, 'gennine Scyths,' 'Seyths properly so called.' In 2.

8 οὐκέτι πολλόν χωρίον ὡς είναι Αἰγύπτου is exactly parallel, cp. 2. 135
where ἀν is added. As to the matter

Thue. 1. 97 commits himself to the former view: and oddly enough Hdt. commits himself similarly in regard to the Thracians, 5. 3 inira. See note there: and in regard to the Indi 3. 94. A reconciliation of the two statements here is not difficult, if the population of the territory, more or less subject to the Seyths, be distinguished from the Scyths proper, or nomad Seyths, or even royal Seyths, who were not perhaps the most numerous' but the only genuine Seyths. Cp. cc. 19, 20 supra, and Appendix 1.

4. τοσόνδε μέντοι ἀπέφαινόν μοι ἐς δψιν. A good deal depends on the exact meaning of this sentence. It has generally been taken to prove that Helt. visited this spot Exampaios, and had seen the bronze krater described below. But grammatically the words fully admit of another interpretation. Hdt. uses the imperfect of actions which were projected but not performed or accomplished: so c.g. εμισθούτο παρ' οὐκ εκδιδύντεν τὴν αὐκὴν 1. 68; πέμψαντεν. ἐκ Σύρδος χρανδο ἀνέωντο 1. 69; επεθέμησε τῆς χλανίδος και αὐτὴν προσελθών ἀντενο 3. 190; οἱ ἀντιθεωνόμενοι Έλληνων ἐξεἰργόν μν 5. 22; ἀνέπειθε πάντας Κυπρίοις συναπίστασθαι 5. 104. Add φαίνουν in c. 82 ἰνήτο, which certainly does not mean "they succeeded in showing me." It is obvious, then, that in this passage Hdt. does not clearly say that he saw the krater at Exampaios. He only says: 'They were for showing —'offered to show me.' The point of his assertion is not his autopsy, but their argument, and the form of his expression is also remarkable. (He does not put it as elsewhere αὐτός ές δψιν άπικόμενος aut sim. ep. c. 195 infra, Introduction, § 20.) His expression discredits their argument, not the existence of the krater of Exampaios: Hdt., while accepting what he heard of the existence of this vast krater, apparently does not think much of it as an optical demonstration of the number of the Seyths, nor commit himself to the story of its origin. But he does not doubt its existence in situ at the moment of writing (néeral) nor assert that it was there when he visited the place (ἐκεῖτο). Stein explains the subject of ἀπέφαινον as of ἐπιχώριοι from 1. 13 infra, but supplies of Τυρίται as the subject of φαίνουσι, c. 82. This is inconsequent. If Τυρίται be the subject of cairovoi it may just as well be the subject of antiparror, or antiparror may have a different subject from Exeyor and from φαίνουσι. Even if οι έπιχώριοι, or έπιχώριοι, be supplied as subject to anteauvor it would not be necessary to conclude that Hdt. visited Exampaios, or saw the krater.

τε ποταμού και Υπάνιος χώρος, ούνομα δέ οί έστι Έξαμπαίος 5 τοῦ καὶ ολίγω τι πρότερον τούτων μνήμην είχον, φάμενος έν αὐτῷ κρήνην ὕδατος πικροῦ είναι, ἀπὶ ής τὸ ῦδωρ ἀπορρέον τὸν "Υπανιν άποτον ποιέειν. Εν τούτφ τῷ χώρφ κέεται χαλκήιον, μεγάθει και έξαπλήσιον του έπι στόματι του Πόντου κρητήρος, τον Παυσανίης ο Κλευμβρότου ανέθηκε. ος δε μη είδε κω 10

If it be argued that the natural way of understanding this passage is the way in which it has been generally understood, I admit so much. But the question is whether the view here advanced is not tenable as a grammatical and logical exposition of the passage, and materially coherent with the general evidences in regard to Hdt.'s visit to the Pontos. If the passage implies a visit to Examples as the passage implies a visit to Examples as the passage implies a visit to Examples as the passage in plies a visit to Examples as the passage implies a visit to Examples as the passage in plies as the passage in passage in plies as the passage in passage in plies as the passage in pass paios, which yet is not directly asserted, it raises the question of Hdt.'s honesty and character as a historian: but if it is conceivable that he might have penned this passage without having been to Exampaios, and without wishing it to be supposed that he had been to Exampaios, culit quaestio. Cp. Intro-duction, § 21.

believe that the four passages were originally in the relation in which we now find them to one another: the first rou και όλίγον κτλ. referring to a statement five lines up; the second referring back over this statement to a statement upwards of 400 (404) lines before (reckoned in Stein's ed. 1884). The story of Skyles, cc. 78-80, may have been inserted after the original composition of the passages

52, 81. But the mystery of the original order of composition is well-nigh insoluble. Cp. Introduction, § 21.
8. χαλκήιον, a brouze. Cp. c. 152 infra.
1. 65 it is used in a different sense ('a smithy'). This Scythian krater is six times the size of one at the Bospores (which held therefore only about 100 which held therefore only about 100. (which held therefore only about 100 amphoreis). Assuming the authoreis here to be the same measure as the Attic μετρητής (see Hultsch, Metrologie, p. 101) which was = 39.39 litres, or about 9 gallons, 600 would = 239.37 hektolitres, or upwards of 5000 gallons. It has been calculated that this krater would have weighed upwards of 40,000 (41,000) al. French pounds, and that no courn cast could be compared to except the great bell in the Kremlin at Moscow, vid. Bachr. On the Bosporos, in the third century B.C., this krater was still to be seen: the story then ran that it was older than the time of Pausanias, and that he had appropriated and rededicated it in his own name. So Nymphis of Herakleia apud Athenaeum, p. 536 (7.9). Cp. the story of Pausanias and a similar act at Delphi, Thuc. 1. 132 (which might be regarded as a confirmation or as a source of the story in Athenaeus); or the conduct of the Lacedaemonians in the case of the golden περιρραντήριον 1. 51. Such plagiarisms were common with the Pharaohs. Cp.

Wiedemann, Acympt. Gosch. i. 87.
It is curious that Hdt. should not refer to the silver krater, dedicated by Kroisos at Delphi, 1. 51, which so many of his readers or hearers would have seen, and which was as nearly as possible the same size as the Scythian bronze.

10. δs δέ μή είδε. Cp. formula, cc. 74

supra, 99 infra (3s δt . . μη παραπί-πλωκε). The implication is strongly in favour of Hdt.'s having seen the krater of Pausanias. Cp. Introduction, § 21. 15. 'Apiárray. Gutschmid (Encl. B. xxi. 9 578 n. 1) dates the floruit of this king to the time of the Seythian embassy to Sparta, 6. 81 infra: obscurum per obscurius. As bronze arrow heads are found in Scythian tombs, the story of the 'primitive census' has verisimilitude. The number of arrow-heads to a pound (old French) × 41,000 would give the number of the Seythians, though only presumably adult males (archers).

17. χρήμα. 1. 36, 3. 109, 130.
20. ταῦτα may cover all back to τοσόνδε μέντοι, or even to καὶ γὰρ κάρτα. In either case the ήκουον militates against the inference that Hdt. had been to Exampaios or seen the krater of Exampaios or seen

82. 1. ἡ χώρη αύτη must obviously be used in the widest sense to include all Seythia at least; but Hdt.'s negation carries no inference as to his travels in the land. The size of the plain has nowhere been insisted on : were it not hinted in c. 23, one might suspect κal rod μεγάθεσι τ. πεδίου for an insertion. On the plain vid. quotations in Rawlinson, iii. p. 41 n. 8, and note to l.c.

The rivers and the plain were certainly two broad features which might well astonish a Greek accustomed to the streams of Hellas proper, or even of Ionia, and their mountain-valleys. The trees 'Hρ. seems rather a bathos thereafter. Hdt. by no means says he has seen this wonder, and Stein is divided between cl επιχώριοι and of Τερίται as subject for palrovot. As Herakles was not a Seythian divinity, and as his mark in the rock would have the same moral as the Herakleid legend above cc. 8-10, viz. to establish a claim for the Greeks, we may be pretty sure that it was Greeks, of Tyras or elsewhere, who acted as showmen in this case, though the presence of Herakles may signify a Phoenician trade-route. Cp. ec. 8, 50 supra.

5. δίπηχυ. Same size as the shoe of Perseus in Egypt 2, 91. Expede Hereulem: it follows that the one hero was about the same superhuman size as the other. A foot of two cubits would give a height of about twelve cubits : or upwards of 18 feet.

7. λόγον. The story of the Scythian expedition, resumed from c. 1 or 4, rather than the (geographical) λόγος introduced c. 16. But their absence on the present occasion is curious. 3. τοῖσι δὶ ζεύγνυσθαι Probably Hellenes, as appears cc. 87, 88 infra, though Phoenician engineers were afterwards employed, in conjunction with Greeks, by Xerxes on the canal at Athos 7. 23, and Phoenicians and Egyptians on the bridges over Hellespont 7. 34. The Bosporos (wrongly Bosphoros) still bears the name Opticator, to distinguish it from the Kimmerian Bosporos (straits of Yenikale):

4. 'Aprάβανος has already an old head on comparatively young shoulders. Thirty years afterwards he reappears to damp the military ambition of Xerxes, 7. 10, where he is represented as resize to the advise he is here repeated. ferring to the advice he is here reported to have given to Dareios. Cp. also c. 143 infra. Such advice comes better from the uncle to the nephew, than from the younger to the claer brother.

5. αὐτόν, 'in person.' Cp. c. 1 supra.
καταλέγων. Used here in a somewhat remarkable way, as only one single particular is specified: perhaps Hdt. had already robbed Artabanos of his items in the passages quoted below. In h καταλεχθείσα πόσα χώρη c. 28 supra the account embraces many particulars, as still more obviously in cc. 50, 95, 114, 118. Cp. specially 5. 36, 6. 50.

- 6. την άπορίην. In 7. 10 Artabanos explains this: ἀνδρας οὐδαμόθι γῆς ἀστυ νέμοντας. Cp. c. 10 supra τοίσι γαρ μήτε άστα μήτε τείχεα . . άμαχοί τε καί άποροι προσμογείν. Cp. also the re-marks of Gobryas c. 134 infra. (From another point of view the Scythians were remarkable for a certain comopia, c. 50 supra.)
- 8, Σούσων. The capital of Elam had been adopted or retained as one of the royal residences by Dareios, if not by Kyros. Cp. note to 5. 40 infra. We hear little in the Greek authors before the age of Alexander of Persian capitals proper. It does not seem probable that the orparos started from Susa: a rendezvous would have been appointed : cp. 6. 95, 7. 26.
- 84. 2. Olóβaζos εδεήθη Δαρείου. Xerxes on a similar provocation at Nardes (see the anecdote of Pythias, 7. 38, 30) is content to execute one out of a family of five sons; but then he gives Pythios 'a bit of his mind'; which is perhaps necessary, in order that proper emphasis should be laid upon the conduct of Xerxes, who was bound to leave nothing undone in the despot's rôle. Other circumstances in the anecdote of Xerxes may be taken to subserve the same unconscious purpose. But the action of Dareios is the more savage, though not on that account the more probable. It is even possible that it is a replica of the ancedote of Xerxes. (Cp. Introduc-tion, pp. lxv. ff.)

6. τους έπι τούτων έπεστεώτας. Cp. 7. 39 τοίσι προσετέτακτο ταίτα πρήσσειν: 7. 36 τοισι προσέκειτο αίτη ή άχαρις τιμή.

 2. Καλχηδονίης. Op. c. 144 infra.
 The journey from Susa to the Besperos is lightly regarded here; did not the king winter on the way, as Xerxes at Sardes in 481-0 s.c. i Op. Introduction, p. xxxv. n. 3. véa. Presumably a Greek ship; but whose ?

 Seme would emend lpφ into lκρίφ the deek or poop of the ship. But lκρία (τὰ) is the only form recognised: the singular here would be unique (ep. 5. 16 infra) and the remark in any case feeble. The

and the remark in any case feeble. The temple of Zeus Urios must be meant, if the reading το lpb be retained.

6. ἀπάντον. Helt. evidently does not think of the Mediterranean as one πέλαγος but as made upof several πελάγη. Cp. the last words of the chapter. The Pontos is made more than twice too long in this estimate, the straight line from the Baumaras to the Plasis. line from the Bosporos to the Phasis being only about 630 miles (5500 stades) instead of 1280 miles (11,100 st.). be said of course that Hdt. is following the coast line, and bases his estimate on the time occupied by sailing, cp. c. 86. In that case he must have vastly overrated the way made under sail, as the distance "even following the sinuosities of the coast" does not exceed 7000 stades (800 m.). These figures are taken from Rawlinson, who asserts that Hdt, "had probably been himself from the Bosphorus

(sic) to the Phasis in a sailing ship." If that were so, how did Hdt, come to take the Phasis as the eastern boundary of the north coast of Asia minor, and apparently to think of that coast as much straighter than it is? Cp. c. 38

τὸ στόμα is now rather more than six, but the passage may have been widened by the current.

10, δ αδχήν looks like a gloss specially with τδ following, and might have been supplied from c. 118 infra. Stein suggests that the Pontes was regarded as the trunk and the Propontis as the head, and so the Bosperos becomes the neck: but the parallel of the Danube disposes of such exact analogy, c. 89 infra. 120 stades, an understatement; the length heing about 16 miles (140 st.).

12. Προποντιβα. As a rule Hdt. does not distinguish the Proportis from the Hellespont, vide c. 38 supra. So, for example, he calls the inhabitants of Perinthos Hellespontians 5. 1 infra. This passage may have been written with fuller knowledge of the character of the waterway between the Acgean and Euxine, gained by his own voyage.

13. ευρος . . μηκος. R. corrects the breadth to 440 st. (c. 50 m.) taking the line from Perinthos to Plakia; and the length to 1000 st. or 115 m.

The length of the Hellespont is "as nearly as possible 40 miles (about 345 stades)": its breadth is now about one mile (33 stades).

14. καταδιδοί ès, 'opens down into ...' 15. The accusative σταδίους is curious. Krüger proposed èπ' ἐπτά σ., Stein the genitive.

86. 1. μεμέτρηται. Cp. infro, μοι με-μετρέαται. The expression closs not in any way carry with it the inference that Hdt. had performed the voyage; it only asserts that he has made a calculation, based on certain data which he indicates. He is probably correct in estimating the voyage from the Bosporos to the Phasis as nine days and eight nights (not allowing for obstruction or delay) and the passage from the Thermodon to Sindike at three days and two nights: be goes astray in taking the distance performed by a sailing ship in twenty-four hours as equal to 13,000 fathoms, or 1300 stades (2, 140), nearly 150 miles. Generally 1000 stades (115 miles) seems to have been reckoned as a twentyfour hours voyage. Cp. Smith, Incl. Antiq. p. 755. 2. For μακρημερίη there is good MSS.

 μακρότατον. An error; the greatest length being from bay of Buighaz (Apollonia) to the Phasis, about 700 miles (over 6000 stades).

S. Σινδικής is an obvious emendation

by Wesseling for transfer. Cp. c. 28 supra.

12. Van II. brackets the first obtes and drops the second. The apparatus of the editors here leaves something to be desired, but the passages cited by van H. and quoted by Stein ed. maj. from Cramer, Anced. Oxun. i. 287, Etym. M. p. 578, 43 suggest some doubt as to the ultimate source of this chapter.

13. παρέχεται.. Πόντου. Stein thinks this last sentence is a later addition; what, only the last sentence? Perhaps the whole passage from rotoxilior supra or from that or toru, in c. 85.

15. Maryres. At present the Sea of Azof is not much more than one-twelfth the size of the Black Sea. It is reasonable on such a matter to suppose that Hdt. made a mistake rather than enlarge the Palus Macotis in the time of Hdt. to "an area four or five times as great as it has at present" (Rawlinson), an enlargement which would still leave the Palus much too small for the position. How should Hdt, have had accurate knowledge of its size? The name has been derived from the tribe of Mocetae or Macetae, whom Rawlinson would connect with the Sauro-Matae. Macotae a quibus lucus nomen accepit, Plin. 4. 26, 10. Inscriptions of the Bosporane kingdom give the form of the name as Maiται, ep. Dittenberger, Syllog, Nos. 103, 104 (C. I.G. 2118, 2119). The folk is mentioned c. 123 infra.

μήτης. Strabo 214 ad θa. quotes Polybiosas saying that the Timavus was Ο δε Δαρείος ώς εθεήσατο τον Πόντον, επλεε οπίσω επί την γέφυραν, της άρχιτέκτων έγένετο Μανδροκλέης Σάμιος. θεησάμενος δὲ καὶ τον Βόσπορου στήλας έστησε δύο ἐπ' αὐτοῦ λίθου λευκοῦ, ἐνταμών γράμματα ἐς μὲν τὴν 'Ασσύρια ἐς δὲ τὴν 5 Έλληνικά, έθνεα πάντα όσα περ ήγε ήγε δε πάντα των ήρχε. τούτων μυριάδες εξηριθμήθησαν, χωρίς του ναυτικού, εβδομήκοντα σύν ίππευσι, νέες δε εξακόσιαι συνελέχθησαν. τησι μέν υυν στήλησι ταύτησι Βυζάντιοι κομίσαντες ές την πόλιν ύστερον τούτων εχρήσαντο πρὸς τὸν βωμὸν τῆς 'Ορθωσίης 'Αρτέμιδος.

locally called πηγήν και μητέρα τῆς θαλάσσης (Adriatic). The 'large' lake from which the Hypanis was said to rise is called c. 52 sepra μήτηρ Tπάνιος. In the case of the P. Macotis a popular Greek etymology (μαΐα) may have suggested, or enforced the metaphor.

87. 1. ὧς ἐθτήσατο, 'when he was done beholding.

beholding . . . Perhaps one (in cuneiform) on the Asiatic and the other on the European side? Or were both on the European side, as we might infer from the action of the Byzantines described just below? One might have expected bilingual inscriptions, i.e. both case such inscriptions would furnish information to Hdt., or to his sources (ep. 5. 36, and Introduction, p. lxxxiii).

4. λίθου λευκού. Marble, c. 79 supra.

Αστύρια, i.e. cuneiform, Persian.

"Hdt. is no doubt inaccurate when he speaks here of Assorrian letters" R. How, when, and where was the numbering How, when, and where was the numbering effected? Obviously before these inscriptions were cut. The record in c. 92 infra looks like a rude attempt at enumeration. The passage before us here is perhaps part of an addition made after Hdt. had visited the Pontos.

5. ἡγε δὲ πάντα κτλ. Like Xerxes. This generality should imply that Phoenicians, Egyptians, Cyprians were serving: how if not on the fleet? But in any case the phrase is a patent in any case the phrase is a patent exaggeration. 700,000 including the cavalry is given as the number realised cavalry is given as the number realised by the general Lende of the Persian empire at this time. This is a more trifle compared to the leve en masse effected by Xerxes Bk. 7. The number of Iships is here 600. In the Marathonian campaign there are also 600 ships, triremes, 6.95 infra. Cp. note ad l.c. No nation or people is named in this story as contributing ships to the fleet except the Greeks (Ionians, Acolians, Hellespontines). The Ionian fleet at Hellespontines). The Ionian fleet at Lade some eighteen years afterwards numbered only 353. See 6. 8 infia. It is very improbable that the 600 vessels employed on the Seythie campaign can have been supplied exclusively by Greeks. Cp. c. 89 infra. Phoenician and parhaps Egyptian vessels were included, cp. 3. 19 for Phoenician fleet under Kambyses, 7. 89, 8. 90 under Xerxes, Aegyptions 7. 89, 8. 17. But the sources used by Hdt. ignored all but the Greek vessels, for the Seythian but the Greek vessels, for the Scythian expedition.

8. Corepov. How long after? Hdt. apparently does not know, or he would, we may suppose, have been more exact (cp. 6. 118): nor is he apparently aware of the tradition that a similar act of defiance was perpetrated by the Kalchedonians on the Asiatic side. Ktesias § 17 (ed. Gilmore, p. 151). Stein suggests on the strength of this passage that the date was immediately after the failure of the expedition. (But was it a failure') Cp. however c. 143 infra: and Appendix III.

9. τῆς 'Ορθωσίης 'Αρτ. Stein, n. ad l., connects the worship of Artemis Orthosia at Byzantion with the Dorian colonisation from the metropolis Megara, and appears to regard this deity as popular with Dorians. Schreiber, in Roseher's Levikon 585, contents himself with describing Artemis Orthia as of purely Helleaic origin ("eine . . . ihrem Ursprunge nach rein hellenische Gestalt"). The identification of Artemis Orthia with Iphigeneia (cp. c. 103 infra) and her connexion with Orestes and Agamemnon disprove a specifically Dorian character, though no doubt the cult was found and adopted, with more or less of modification, in Sparta and Megara, and other places where the Dorians pushed in. The primitive localisation of the cult at Lemnes (old name of Lemnos, Taurike, Schreiber, op. c. 688) may be safely taken back to a prac-Hellenic epoch. The idea that Byzantion was genuinely Dorian because Megara was its metropolis is on a par with the theory that Kyrene was Dorian because Thera was its metropolis, vide infra cc. 147 ff.

If the l'hoenicians penetrated into the Pontos before the Greeks, it is probable that they carried their cults of 'Artemis' and 'Herakles' with them (cp. notes c. 82 supra). When colonists from Hellas arrived, they found cults already established, which they rightly identified with cults they had left behind, the religions in Peloponnese, in the islands, on Hellespont and Bosporos comprising elements that were there established long prior to the advent of the Dorians, and foreign, if not unterior, to the Hellenic settlement.

Orthosia: the cult was ascetic and Orthosia: the cult was ascetic and sensual. Schreiber, cp. c. 586, suggests a phallic origin for the title, comparing Dionysos Orthos, the δρθία τρρις of the Ass. Pindar Pyth. 10, 32, and Aristoph. Lycistr. 944 (cp. δρθά 2. 51). We may add that the δροφορβό Astrabakos was said to have found the lost image of Artemis Orthia, and to have gone out of his mind thereon. Pausan. 3. 16. See for Astrabakos 6. 69 infra. Yet the hypothesis looks awkward in regard to a female title, though it may be preferred to Preller's suggestion (Gr. Myth. i.2 250) that the title was derived from the stiff columnar character of the archaic images of the goldess, a characteristic which was not confined to the Edava in question.

Rawlinson understands 'A. & to be "Diana (sic) who had established or preserved their city. (Compare the Latin 'Jupiter Stater.')" As a matter of fact Dionys. Halic. uses 'Opthoros Zees for the Latin Jupiter Stator, 2. 50. Jup. Stator however is not the founder, establisher, or preserver of cities, but a god of battle. Livy 1. 198. Cp. Preller, Rom. Myth. vol. i. p. 351, and vol. ii. p. 198 (where Stator item Conservator and item depulsor are given from C. J. L.).

May we not venture to regard A. Orthosia as a later and more ethical form of A. Orthia? The first place where the title occurs is in Pindar, Ol. 3. 30, n.c. 476. The derivation of the title from a mountain in Arcadia named Orthion (Schol, to Pindar) is worthy of a Scholiast, and is refuted by the alternative: ήτοι τῆ όρθούση τὰς γυναϊκας και els σωτηρίαν ἐκ τῶν τοκετῶν ἀγούση, an alternative which has at least the merit of a reference to recognised functions of Artemis.

12. ὁ χῶρος. The description reads very like autopsy, cp. Introduction, § 21.
14. ἰροῦ. Cp. c. Sɔ supra.
88. l. ἡσθείς. Darcios' progress through Thrace is a succession of delights: the Despot was in excellent humour: see further c. 91 infra, ήσθεις τῷ ποταμῷ, and c. 97 κάρτα δὲ ἦσθη τῷ γνώμη.
2. πᾶσι δέκα. Stein compares 9.

5. γραψάμενος. Can any one doubt that Hdt. saw this picture in the Heraion, or that stories connected with it have found their way into his namative? How much of the story of the campaign may be due to Samian sources it is impossible

On its engineers ep. 3, 60. The greatest work at Samos, the water tunnel and duct, so accurately described by Hdt. Lc. (ep. H. F. Tozer, Islands of the Aeguan, pp. 168 ff.), was the week of a Megarian, by name Eupalinos, son of Naustrophos, of whom we know nothing further. The whom we know nothing turther. The work may have been executed under Polykrates. Rhockes (3, 60), Telekles (3, 41), Theodores (1, 51, 3, 41), or the two Theodori 'see K. O. Muller, Ancient Act, E. Was the remarkable arginting been put to recent the able painting, here put on record, the work of a Samian ! Hdt. unfortunately omits the painter's name. It was not from the hand of Mandrokles (γραψάμενος mid.), though he may have himself composed the epagam (empayas, but ep. e. 91 mira; as well as the pontoon. 39, 2. Suppositives . Sulfaire. This would some to imply that the session or review of Darcios took place on the Asiatic side. The passage of the Great King on to European soil for the first time is an historic moment of the highest interest, and a modern historian would be likely to improve the occasion: but Hdt. is too good a story-teller to overdo such situations. Besides, he was reserving, if he had not already expended, his strength for the nearer and more thrilling parallel in the case of Xerxes.

In any case the fleet apparently was to make straight for the Ister. Cp. e. 99

90. 2. τῶν περιοίκων. These words do not prove that Hdt. himself visited the source of the Tearos: a local assertion probably reached him in Heraion, or Perinthos, or Apollonia, if indeed it be not derived from a literary source, or be more than an inference. Cp. Introduction, § 20. The geography of this passage has hardly received in some quarters the attention that might have been expected. The Geogr. Journal, 1854, vol. 24, pp. 36 ff., contains a paper, Notes on a Journey into the Bulkans, or Mount Huemus, in 1847, by Lieut. Gen. A. Jochmus, in which the routes of Darcies, and of Alexander, 335 n.c. (Arrian, Anabasis, 1, 1 ff.) are discussed. The route of Darcios through Thrace bed him down to Perinthos, and then northward to the 'neek' of the Danube. He would have to pass the Balkan (Haimos), but of that Hdt. says nothing. (Haimos), but of that Hdt. says nothing. Jochmus claims to have made out the 38 sources of the Tearos near the villages of Yene and Bunarhissar 'easily,' in which case the Tearos is the Simerdere, which has lost its medicinal properties, though keeping the number of its springs, and apparently its name (Dere, Deara). Yene is more than two days' journey from either Erckli (Perinthos) or Sizeboli (Apollonia), being 70 miles from the former, and rather more from the latter. Plainly Hdt. can hardly have visited the springs. hardly have visited the springs.

in such cases can only be on the principle qui facil per alium (ep. chrypatas c. 88 sapra). Some persons foully believe that this inscription or "a portion of this inscription" was in existence "a few years ago" (Rawlinson ad l., Jochmus, op. c.). That Darcios set up one or more inscriptions in Thrace is not unlikely; but that any Parcias in unlikely: but that any Persian in-scription contained the lines preserved by Hdt. is less likely. Cp. 1. 188 στρα-τεύεται δέ δη βασιλείς ὁ μέγας καl σετίοισε εθ έσκευασμένος έξ οίκου και προ-βάτοισε και δη και ύδωρ άπο του Χοάσπεω ποταμού αμα αγεται του παρά Σούσα βέοντος του μαίνου πίνει βασιλεύς και άλλου οὐδενός ποταμού. The believers will also have it that the inscription was in cunciform, though Hdt. does not say so (cp.

92. 2. 'Αρτησκός. If the Artiskos were correctly identified by d'Anvillo and Gattener with the Arda or Arta (see Larcher viii. p. 52), Dareios would have had to cross the Maritza (Hebros) before coming to it. This would destroy the credit of Hdt. Jochmus followed by Rawlinson identifies it with the Teke-dereh which is crossed several times on the present high road to the Balkan. Of the maps some place the Artiskos on the W., others on the E. of the Hebros; owing to the above difference among the geographers.

Sià 'OSpuolav, Thuc. 2. 96. Adrianople (Uscadama) now stands about the centre of the great plain which formed apparently the territory of the Odrysae, probably separated from the Getae by the Balkan, until their frontier was pushed ferward to the Danube by Sitalkes, c. 80 supra. But it is possible that the Odrysae at this period (512 B.C.) lay wholly west of the Hebros, in which case Darelos did not march through their territory. It is certainly curious that no notice is taken of their fate.

3. 70.600c. This performance looks like a rude attempt at a count of the army, else why the 'one man one stone'! Op. cc. $1 supra, 98 infra, 7. 60.

93. 1. mpiv. It is curious that Hdt. does not mention the Balkans or specify by what pass Darcios crossed from the territory of the Odrysne to that of the Getae. If Darcios crossed as far to the E, as Jochmus supposed, with a view to getting him to Apollonia, it is strange that the flect should have been sent too to the Danube c. 89 supra, and that we hear nothing of the king's presence in the Greek cities on the Thracian coast of the Pontos. Hdt. indeed knew at some time in his life that there was a block of mountains between the Danube and Thrace called Haimos, cp. c. 49 supra, but his geography and geographical excursus are independent of his history, and his history of his geography: the sources he follows here for Darcies campaign made no mention of mountains or passes. Cp.

no mention of mountains or passes. Cp. Appendix II.

2. Γέτας. The Getae, here first mentioned in history, are identified with the Goths by Rawlinson who compares Massa-getae, Thyssa-getae, Tyri-getae, Visi-goths, Ostro-goths. The identification is very doubtful. See Mullenhoff, Incutsch. Alterthomesk. iii. 162. Their home lay apparently between the Balkans and the Danube. Bulgaria-after the treaty of Berlin, 1878, represented the territory of the Getae of Hdt. Cp. Fyffe, Mod. Europe, iii. 518.

3. Σαλμυδησσόν. The name is perhaps connected with that of the Thracian deity Σάλμ-οξα, the termination assos, Salmydessas, Apollonia, and Mesambria are all on the W. coast of Pontos. They are mentioned in order from S, to N. Mesambria the most northerly is south of Haemus, south of which therefore the Kyrmianae and Nipsaei must be placed. Salmydessos was a wild coast where 'wrecking' was organised, see Xen. Anab. 7. 5. 13. Athenians did not know much about it, if it be this Salmydessos that Aischyl. Prom. 726 locates in Asia, and the names of the tribes here given are doubtful. Apollonia, see c. 90

Mesambria is not to be confused with the town mentioned 7. 108. Oddly enough Hdt. appears in 6. 33 infra to date the colonisation of this Mesambria after the Ionic revolt, though he here seems to imply that it was in existence when Dareios went by. He ascribes it to fugitives of Byzantion and Chalke-don: in later times it was traced to Megara the metropolis of those cities, Strabo 319. -bria was Thracian for a town: Steph. Byz. who gives Selymbria, l'oltymbria as further examples. Cp. Strabo 319. It has been thought that Mesambria formed one member of a pentapolis, the others being Apollonia to the south, and Odessos, Kallatis, Tomi to the north. C.I.G. ii. p. 79, 2056 c,

This primitive monotheism is almost unintelligible to the tolerant Greek polytheist, and is apparently not reckoned to the credit of the Getac, who showed perhaps in religion as in policy a certain ἀγνωμοσύνη. At the same time the absurdity to IIdt. is rather in a Thracian god being the only deity, than in the idea of there being but one God; as he was not altegether a but one God; as he was not altogether a stranger to the monotheistic tendency of his own age and people (cp. Introduction, § 22), even though there is nothing in

2. Ellipson These Greeks were in regard to this particular case. The 'historicising' method had been introduced presumably by the first Logo-graphi, Genealogists, Historians, perhaps partly as an adaptation of the wisdom of the Egyptians (2. 43, 143), and is illustrated by Hdt. himself (2. 44, ct al.) as well as by Thucydides (1. 3, 4, 2. 15, esp. 2. 29). After much discredit it has been revived in a somewhat extreme form in our own day by Mr. Herbert Spencer (csp. in his Ecclesiastical Institutions). That within certain limits it is a genuine method in accordance with facts has been virtually demonstrated by Sir A. Lyall's Asiatic Studies. 6. unappoverfpow. It is likely enough that the sharp-witted Greeks often got the better of these Getae in their bargains. So "Large quantities [of gunflints!) are annually exported from London to the Gold Coast for the interior of Africa, where a brisk trade is still done with the confiding aborigines Mag. of Art. Oct. 1887. (African travellers do not all seem to find the aborigines confiding, but rather cunning and hard bargainers, see W. M. Kerr, The Far Interior, ii. 121, 233 et passim.)

7. ήθα. It may be doubted whether his morals had been improved by contact with Hellenes, especially lonians. Some commentators here find a deliberate hit at the Ionians. Stein sees intentional irony in this passage, and argues from it that Hdt. disliked the Pythagoreans: comparing 2, 123 ad jin. In regard to Pythagoras and his doctrines and rule of life, there is very little to show that Hdt. understood, or knew much about them: otherwise we might have expected more information concerning the position and influence of the Pythagoreans in Italy than he affords. In regard to the passage 2, 123: admitting that there is a reference to Pythagoras, the way it is made shows consideration and respect, rather than dislike. Cp. c. 43 supra.

Helt, has a slight anti-Ionian feeling -(cp. Introduction, p. lxvi.), but in the passage before us here I can see no intentional irony. Stein finds it in πθεα β. and δίαιτα Ἰάς. What then is to be said of Έλλησι I The word σοφιστής, which of Evypt I The word coccerts, which a few years later would perhaps have shown malice prepense, has no dyslogistic force in Hdt.; cp. 1. 29. There is indeed irony in this passage, but it is unconscious, the self-exposure of those Greeks whose mouth-piece for the moment is Helt, though he himself does not credit the tale, and charges them with an anachronism. And there is also malice in the story, which must be put down to these Greeks of Pontos, among whom Samos and the Samians were no doubt unpopular, they themselves mostly hailing from Miletos or Megara.

19. outo. The absurdity by not in their accepting his doctrines upon the strength of a miracle, but in their being taken in by a sham miracle. The way in which these Pontine Greeks rationalised away the traditions, or beliefs, of their Thracian neighbours, on the imposture hypothesis, resembles in more than one respect some of the rational-istic paradoxes of the last century.

Strabe 297 f., 203 f. tells the story of Zamolxis (sic) without any malice or irony. According to the version followed by him this Geta, Zamolxis, had been in the service of Pythagoras, and had visited Egypt and other places. On his return to his native land he rose to great power, persuaded the king to associate him with himself in authority, became priest of the deity most honoured among the Getae, withdrew himself from the public to a cave, and was by and by recognised as a divinity. It is the same story told in a kindlier vein, and revived perhaps in the days of Strabo in the interests of that Byrebistas who seemed likely to be troublesome to the Romans, and who had an drip your, Dekainers, in his train, who had been in Egypt and learnt its wisdom, and resenanted the rôle ascribed to Zamolxis. The 'total abstinence' of the Getae, which in Strabo is represented as a result of local option with them under the influence of the wizard, may have been long a matter of fact; the Pontine Greeks indeed seem to insinuate that it was hardly a matter of choice (κακόβιοι), but though in Strabo the abstinence of the Getae is traced back to the influence of Zamolxis, in the passage before us a contrary influence is ascribed to him.

96. 3. δοκίω. Otherwise (perhaps Hdt.

thinks) there would not have been time for the development of the rite described in c. 94, as actually practised by the Getae. The death of Pythagoras at an advanced age is variously dated 499 a.c., 472 a.c. See Clinton, Fast. H. ad ann. But ep. Ueberweg, Hest. of Philosophy, p. 45 (E. T.), Burnet, Early Gk. Phil.

The opening words of c. 89 supra might naturally be taken to mean that the fleet was ordered to sail to the mouth of the Danube, throw a pontoon across the river there, and await the king's arrival. So Rawlinson translates. If so, the king's orders were disobeyed, for the fleet advanced two days up the river to 'the neek,' and there con-structed the pontoon. This point is now reached by Dareies; and as every-thing goes smoothly we must suppose that the rendezvous was according to orders. We might conjecture that the king was ignorant of there being more king was ignorant of there being more than one channel, or mouth, if it were worth while to harmonise such discrepancies: and was easily satisfied that the Ionians had obeyed the spirit of his orders. Where is the neek to be located? Stein and Blakesley do not raise the question. Rawlinson practically gives it up as insoluble (vol. iii, pp. 79, 80). Was the passage effected at the mouth or mouths by ship? or up the river at 'the neek' on a pontoen? or elsewhere, higher up? or was it ever or elsewhere, higher up t or was it ever effected at all 1 Is the bridging of the Ister a reduplication of the bridging of the Bosporos? Such questions may legitimately be raised, especially in the light of the improbabilities of the story which follows. (Cp. Appendix III.) But on the whole it seems credible that Dareios crossed the Ister, perhaps in the vicinity of Galatz, possibly much higher up than two days row, a small contingent of the fleet being sent up the stream to throw a bridge across while stream to throw a bridge across, while the greater portion of the fleet remained at the mouth. The majority of the craft sent up the river must surely have been used for the bridge itself, and perhaps the Greek ships were specially employed on this service. Cp. cc. 83, 87, 89 supra.

5. Avoavras. Is it to be supposed that the bridge was to be broken up and the whole fleet abandoned? Or were the ships to be sent down stream and home? Or what was to be the service of the fleet? This command to the Ionians is unintelligible, except on the supposition that Darcies was going round by the Kaukases. Cp. Appendix

 Κώης. This name was remembered perhaps from his fate in the Ionian revolt afterwards. He was only orparneds at this time: the reparels was understood to have been the reward of his services on this occasion 5, 37. Cp. c. 137 infra. Μυτιληναίων. The reduction of Lesbos has not been previously specified.

8. πυθόμενος πρότερον. A charming touch, full of verisimilitude, and just what a Greek story-teller would introduce as characteristic of oriental court-life. Rawlinson compares the inquiry of Kroisos 1. 88, an item no doubt equally true or equally fictitious.

10. appportion. Are we to suppose that the plough was introduced among the Seythian Georgi and Areteres subsequent to the expedition of Darcios! or that Dareies was not going against the district where the Aroteres and Georgi were to be found (cp. 7. 10), or that Koes was ignorant of the existence of agriculture in Seythia? or that the story is a free creation?

Mutatis mutandis, the same remarks apply to the assertion that there were no πόλεις in the land to be invaded; there were at least the Greek colonies on the Scythic coast; to say nothing of Gelonus (#6%: $eMeq c. 108) which Dareios is represented as taking (c.

98. 1. appara eficorra. These sixty knots, or days, play a considerable part in the sequel: cc. 193, 196 ff. But so much the worse for the whole stery. That the knotted cord (Peruvian, Quipu) is an authentic method of reckoning among primitive felks cannot be doubted. Cp. Tylor, Early Histary of Mankind?, pp. 156 ff. There are some strings of this character in the Pitt Rivers collection at Oxford, one in particular, connected with observances after a great man's death, in which the knots are reinforced by bits of tortoise-shell for the 'red-letter days': and an exact parallel to the story here recorded is to be found in the action of the naked but gentle savage, Abba Thulle, described by Kente (Pelew Islands, London 1788, p. 223): "Between the hours of two and three a messenger from the northwards arriving, the king was thereupon awakened by one of his attendants, who brought in a lighted terch; he instantly arose and ordered the messenger to be introduced; after holding some conversation with him, the king delivered to him a piece of cord, on which he had tied as many knots as there would be days before our people purposed to sail." The number of days was apparently only six or seven, cp. cp. 216 for a second instance. But that the Great King dealing with Ionian Greeks at the close of the sixth century, had recourse to so simple a device for assisting them in counting two moons and four days is hardly credible. As well suppose that Kleisthenes of Sikyon reckoned time by so primitive a device, when he invited the Suitors to Sikyon of. 126 infra: or that Hdt. is satirising the Ionians. The device is probably geographically true: i.e. it may have been employed by the Greek traders in their intercourse with the natives of the steppes, or by the natives among themselves.

What inference they were to draw should he not reappear within the sixty days the king left the Ionians to guess; nor has Hdt. colightened his readers on this point.

A modern historian would have proceeded more systematically; first saying all he had to say on land and people, and then giving an unbroken narrative of events. This is not Hdt.'s manner. But whether his method is determined entirely by free choice, or does not betray the celectic character of his work, the variety of its sources, and the discontinuity in its composition, are questions not to be hastily answered in favour of free choice. See answered in layour of free choice. See Introduction, § 20, and Appendix II. Stein suggests that in the original MS. a map was here inserted. But it would be a map without rivers: the seythia of the narrative portion needs no map. The map would have been more in place in illustration of cc. 16-20. But there is no evidence, or hint of such extrementary on Hall 's perf.

πρόκευταν. Stein compares 2, 12 which proves that Hdt. here means that Thrace projects farther into the reference to the Mediterranean I cannot see. Hdt. knows that the east coast of Thrace is hollowed into a bay (κόλπου čė άγ. τ. γ. τ.) succeeded by a projection, succeeded by Scythia. How the river can be said to empty itself into the land instead of into the sea is rather obscure. Stein makes (κοιδο) refer to the whole distance for which the river is to be conceived as forming the boundary between Thrace and Scythia, and compares ο. 49 ές τὰ πλάγια της Σκιθικής ἐσβάλλει. Rawlinson boldly translates "into the ea." Hdt.'s language is obscure because his ideas are confused.

3. τὸ στόμα. Helt, thinks of the Ister higher up as forming the frontier practically parallel with the (imaginary) coast of Macotis and the Tanais boundary. The correct lie of the mouth was however known to him. In c. 47 sugra he has described the river as having five mouths

(like the Nile, 2, 10).

6. ἀρχαίη. If this meant 'original' from which the Kimmerians had been longest driven out, as Rawlinson holds, then it would appear that the Soyths entered Scythia from the west. Stein explains it as meaning merely 'Seythia proper': but in the four parallel passages quoted by him 1. 75, 2. 24, 7. 184, 9. 48, there is a contrast between two conditions temporally removed from each other (of river, sun, fleet, army), and though his term urspringlish is applicable, the term cip atlich is ques-

τὸ δὲ ἀπὸ ταύτης. Hdt. is describing the Crimes which forms in his mind a sort of prolongation of the south and east coasts of Seythia, resembling the tip of Attica, or the heel of Italy. It is evident that he does not know the correct shape of the Crimea, nor the fact that it is attached to the mainland by a narrow isthmus. has come into existence since.

That Hdt.'s illustration which applies to Attica can only have been written after a visit to Athens, and that referring to the Japygi in promontory after a visit to Italy, is almost self-evident. What is not so generally remarked is that both illustrations may be insertions, that the second looks specially like an addition, and that in any case the passage is not calculated in the first instance for an Italiote audience, or the order of the illustrations would have been reversed.

100. 2. τὰ πρὸς θαλάσσης τῆς ἡοίης. Explained by the words which follow as including parts on the Kimmerian Bospores (cp. cc. 12, 83 supra) and the Palus Macotis. It would therefore appear that Hdt. in this place conceives the corner inhabited by the Tauri as extending below the Kimmerian Losporos, the western shore of which is inhabited by Seyths. The length of the K. Bosporos he does not specify.

δ. τὰ κατύπερθε is την μεσόγαιαν φέροντα, i.e. the parts inland and north of a line drawn from the (hypothetical) bend of the Ister, parallel with the south coast of Scythia, and extending to the Macotis, or to a point on the Tanais 20 days (4000 st.) inland (upstream) from the (open) sea, outside the Kimmerian Bosperos. Those parts are occupied by four tribes, enumerated from W. to E.: Agathyrsi, Neuri, Androphagi, Melunchlaeni. This tribal order is one of Hdt.'s fixed ideas, ep. cc. 102, 125, though the Agethyrsi do not appear with the Neuri, Androphagi, Melanchlaeni in the geography, ec. 17-20. Cp. ing as he may that it is quadrangular': the words which follow (mdvrn toor) and the measurements there detailed, and the total absence of any further specifi-cations in regard to the two sides not here described, leave no doubt that Hdt. in this passage represents Scythia as practically a square of 20 days' journey, or 4000 stades (c. 460 m.), each way. Of these sides the south is formed by the sea coast from the Istres to the Palus (excluding Tanpor) just described, c. 99); the east by the coast of the Palus, and, presumably, the lower part of the Tanais; the north side, by a row of four non-Seythian tribes (the natural frontier on that side would have been the desert or lakes elsewhere specified, cp. Appendix II.), while the west side of Seythia is formed apparently by the Istros and Thrace. That the lower course of the Tanais forms part of the E. frontier of Seythia is suggested by c. 122, cp. c. 21. Stein's map is therefore not correct in drawing the ideal north frontier line from the mouth of Tanais: except indeed that Hdt. expresses himself in terms hardly consistent with one another, see infra, next note and Appendix II.

Hdt.'s employment of the terms τὸ ἐς τὴν μεσόγαιαν τὸ παρλ τὴν θάλασσαν, and τὰ κατέπερθε ἐς τὴν μεσόγαιαν ψέροντα (c. 100 super) leaves a good deal to be desired. There are here four terms employed, but only three sides of Seythia clearly indicated, the western side remaining here un-

Sorres optor lóyor, c. 77 supra, 6. 138, etc. How Hdt. came by all the exact information that follows regarding what passed in the councils of the Seyths, it does not fall within his province, as he conceives, to specify: how much in the form of the story is Hdt.'s own work it is perhaps impossible to determine: only one thing is clear, that we are not dealing with historical details. Not merely is there too little evidence that these matters did so bappen as here described; there is convincing argument that they could not have harmened. See Armendix III

τους πλησιοχώρους. Tauti are in the south-cast, c. 99 supra: the four tribes next named recur as usual in order from west to east, and form the north boundary of Seythia, c. 100 supra: the Geloni, Budini, and Sauromata are east of Tauais, cc. 21, 22 supra. The Seyths are apparently excluded from this congress, which takes place at a time and place unspecified. The mention of it, however, affords the narrator opportunity for an anthropological excursus, which would hardly pological excursus, which would hardly have been in its proper place here, if the geographical portions above cited (ec. 21 ff.) had formed originally an integral part of the Σαυθακοί λόγοι, οτ τον κατ' άρχὰς της λέξων λόγον (c. 82 supra).
3. και δη = ηδη Stein, who compares

 190, S. 94, 9. 0, etc.
 103. 1. Ταῦροι μέν. Hdt,'s information about the Tauri is not to be regarded as the result of a personal visit to the country, nor is there anything that implies that he saw the coast, rather the reverse, cp. c. 99 supra. He indicates a conflict of hearsay authorities (οι μέν δή λέγουσι . . οι δέ), and the dubious assertion below made upon the authority of the Tauri themselves (Neyoual airol Tappor) is a good illustration of the fallacy of inferring from this formula that Hdt. is himself drawing directly and immediately from every fountain-head of tradition which he names. Cp. Introduction, p. lxxix.

The Tauri were wreckers and pirates who found a religious sanction for profitable but inhuman and unhellenic practices: worse in fact than the Thracians of Salmydessos described by Xen. Anab. 7. 5, 13 (c. 93 supra).

3. 'Ellipuw. The only persons they would find on the high seas

Iπαναχθέντες, 'on the high seas.'
The word has MS. authority, and is restored by Stein for the ἐπαναχθέντας mistranslated 'delates illue,' or the conjecture of Schweighauser ἀπενειχθέντας, which would be rightly so rendered, but gives a sense very much inferior to the MS, reading. For ἐπανάγω see L. & S. sub v. IV. and correct V.

καταρξάμενοι. Cp. c. 60 supra.

9. 'Ioiyévaav. This would be very small consolation to the Hellenic victims or their friends. On the probable ante-cedents of this Virgin, see note c. 87 The cult was un-Hellenie and prae-Hellenic, going back to old Lemnos and the Lemnians, a trace perhaps of l'hoenician influences in the Aegean and l'entos, though of course it is not improbable that the Semitic rituals found some native elements or cults with which to coalesce, just as in the case of Hellenie worships.

or smoke-vents, according to Hdt.
14. υπεραιωρέεσθαι, 6. 116 infra.
104. 1. Αγάθυρσοι. A remarkable contrast to the Thracians just across the Danube (ep. c. 95 supra), whom they nearly approach in all other customs except those next specified!

Stein argues that adpos here seems to apply only to externals, at least if it is to be reconciled with the spirited conduct of the Agathyrsi described in c. 125 infra. But this ingenious argument assumes that Holt, is conscious and careful of such latent inconsistencies. Moreover the word was used in the poets, especially Pindar, without any con-demuatory sense: nor in 1.71 does Hdt. appear to use it in such a sense (ocre asper our dyador order). Here perhaps he uses the word in a poetical way or even from a poetical source. On the gold ep. c. 5 supra. It is a suspicious circumstance that it should be so common with the Agathyrsi.

2. ἐπίκουνν. The extent and evidences of this promiseuity require definition before the anthropologist can make much of it: nay, it is doubtful, notwithstanding the frequency with which such conditions have been reported by outsiders, whether they ever or anywhere have existed. (Cp. Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, ec. iv. v. vi., and ec. 172, 150 infra.)

of Consumptinity, etc., Washington, 1871. A result of certain so ial arrangements very different from the patriarchal system seems here ascribed to moral and sentimental intentions, though the rationale of such things is to be sought rather in economic and social causes, than in the spiritual motives which led Plato to prospiritual motives which led Plato to pro-pose a reversion to Communism, in the Ideal State. We have here in fact another example of the ordinary Greek rational-ism of the day, which resembled some modern rationalisms in explaining primitive man's action by motives or ideas, good and bad, drawn from the experiences of civilised society. In this of Salmoxis above, the reverse.) This explanation was from an Hellenic Rousseau. It is unhistorical. (Cp. for a modern instance of the same sort note to 6. 65 infra.)

1. φθόνος is an eminently political or civil vice (cp. 7. 237 πολεήτης μέν πολεήτης εὐ πρήσσεντι φθονέει), but the abolition of the family, or even of property, will hardly evadicate it, so long as society gives more honour, or God more ability, to one man than to another.

105. l. Napol. The wizard Neuri separate the wealthy and well-intentioned Agathyrsi (c. 104) from the unjust and inhuman Androphagi (c. 106).

This story of an evacuation of the country before a plague of serpents looks as though it had some sort of historic fact behind it (ep. c. 173 infra). Hdt. must be understood to mean that the Neuri returned after the serpents disappeared, for the Nemi, not the scrpents, are in possession at the time of Darcies and in the historian's own day, The comparative exactness of the date is re-markable. It might be conjectured that the story really records the advent of the Neuri to their historic district on the confines of Scythia, which is represented (by implication) as a return, and reoccupation of territory rightly their own: though Σκυθικοίσι, γενεή δε μιή πρότερον σφεας της Δαρείου στρατηλασίης κατέλαβε εκλιπείν την χώρην πάσαν υπο οφίων οφιας γάρ σφι πολλούς μεν ή χώρη ανέφαινε, οι δε πλεύνες ανωθέν σφι έκ των ερήμων επέπεσον, ες ο πιεζόμενοι οϊκησαν μετά 5 Βουδίνων την έωυτων έκλιπόντες. κινδυνεύουσι δε οί άνθρωποι ούτοι γόητες είναι. λέγονται γάρ ύπο Σκυθέων καὶ Έλληνων των έν τη Σκυθική κατοικημένων ώς έτεος έκάστου απαξ των Νευρών εκαστος λύκος γίνεται ήμέρας όλίγας καὶ αὐτις όπίσω ές τωυτο κατίσταται. έμε μέν νυν ταῦτα λέγοντες οὐ πείθουσι, 10 λέγουσι δε οὐδεν ήσσον, καὶ ὁμνῦσι δε λέγοντες. 4. ἄνωθέν σφι έκ τῶν ἐρήμων. Cp. c. 17 καρτα Νευρῶν δὲ τὸ πρὸς βορέην ἀνερον ἔρημον ἀνθρώπων ὅσον ἡμεῖς ίδμεν.

6. Boullvov. Stein objects that the Budini were according to Hdt. (c. 21 supra) beyond the Tanais. What of that? The Budini were in any case the next people to the east of the Neuri of whom the Greeks had any real know-ledge. See notes on Androphagi (c. 106) and Melanchlaeni (c. 107), names which are perhaps only descriptive epithets hypostatised and inserted between the Neuri and the Budini, to enrich the perspective.

7. Kyorra. The Seyths told the Hellenes living in Seythia, who told Herodotus? At least the swearing looks as though he had heard strong language. Did the Greeks swear that the Seythians but the Greeks swear that the stythians told them? On the formula cp. Introduction, § 22. The belief in werewolves is wide-spread. Cp. Tylor's Irim. Culture, i. 113, 303 (Werewolves) and ii. 191 ff. (Vanapires).

in various accounts and narratives collected by him.

4. γλώσσαν Stein explains with φο-ρέουσε as a zeugma. Holder (following Roiske) inserts (χουσι, van Herweiden (following Dobree) leiσι after lõipe. ανδροφαγίονσε. Holder reads, with β (= R + (V + S)), ανθρωποφαγίονσε. Whatever their title, it is not likely that these cannibals restricted their appetite to the one sex. (On Cannibalism, cp. Osear Peschel, Rucce of Man, E. tr. pp. 161 ff. Peschel endeavours to establish three points: (1) that cannibalism is not a necessary stage in evolution, (2) that it is unconnected with the custom of human sacrifice, (3) that it is not peculiar to inferior races, but "is most frequently encountered exactly among those nations and groups of nations which are distinguished from their neighbours by their abilities and more mature social condition." Cp. c. 26 supra, 3. 99, 1. 216—all cases in which the cannibalism seems to have a religious significance. 3. 38 gives the philosophy of the question, l'esprit des lois, in the form of an anecdote.)

107. 1. Μελάγχλαινοι. άλλο έθνος καὶ οὐ Σκυθικόν c. 20 supra. If the Seyths did not wear black (skin) coats, one or more of the tribes inland did so. Rawlinson suggests that the name may be a translation of the native name, citing parallel cases from India and America. It is certain that these Blackeapes have a long literary history from Hekataios, who calls them a Scythic tribe (F. 154,

2. τὰς ἐπωνυμίας. The plural here is embarrassing: the text is not above suspicion, for the worls ἀνδροφαγέονσι or deθρωποφαγέσισε μοθνοι τουτών occur here in the MSS, after έχουσι, and were transferred to the previous chapter by Reiz (after Wesseling), whom the rest have followed.

108. 1. Boustvo. In c. 21 supra the Budini are placed E. of Tanais. Nothing is here said of the Tanais, but as in c. 100 supra the Melanchlaeni are re-Neuralos, farthest east, of the tribes forming the north boundary of Scythia, the map-maker may be justified in representing the Tanais as the boundary between the Melanchaeni and Budini-Geloni.

2. γλανκόν, 'blue-eyed.' Cp. J. H. H.
Schmidt, Synonymik, i. p. 585.
πυρρός is darker than ξανθός, Plato

Tim. 65 c, and generally refers to the hair. If Stein is right in taking it here of the skin on the strength of Hippokr.
of Aer. 20 (sp. Neumann, p. 155), where certainly it is so used and applied to the whole Scythic race, then Hdt.
is here guilty of making a distinction where none existed, the Budini in his conception plainly offering a physical contrast to the Scyths. But there is no need to divert the word from its usual need to divert the word from its usual application by reference to Hippokrates a junior contemporary of Hdt. whom it is not to be supposed that Hdt. is here quoting. Larcher takes the terms to refer to painting the body red and green: citing Verg. Georg. 2: 115 and Heyne's note. To see in these red-haired blue-eyed Budini "the ancestors of the German race," as Rawlinson does in one sentence, or "a remnant of the Cim-merians," as he does in the next sentence but one (vol. iii. p. 92, n.): or in their city, the Asgard of the Seaudinavian mythology, with Lenormant (Manual, ii. p. 134), or to identify them with

ii. p. 134), or to identify them with Buddhists, as did apparently the great geographer C. Ritter, Vorhalic, p. 391, or indeed to adopt any one of the numerous hypotheses in respect to their ethnology, is to go beyond the evidence, which is too imperfect to lead to any determination. The article in Smith, Diet. Geogr. i. 455, is worth consulting. πόλις . Γέλωνός. It is not for members of a modern 'nation of shopkeepers,' with experience of the zeal of commercial (and missionary) enterprise and settlements, to question the possibility of such an Hellenic colony or outpost as is here described. Still one cannot but feel that such a well-organised and permanent establishsuch one cannot but feel that such a well-organised and permanent establishment as is implied in this description seems improbable, located, as it is, in the heart of savagery. It cannot be supposed that Hdt. speaks as an eye-witness, though he speaks with the assurance of one. Nor should the fact that the description is averaged whether the description is averaged with the same of the second secon that the description is correct ecclesiastically, ayaluara, Bupol, enol being the three essential requisites for Hellenic temple-service (Stein), and the orginstic Dionysos festivals being biennial, in any way mislead us into believing that Hdt. ever set eyes on the wooden walls of Gelonos. If such things were evidences there would be an end to all story-telling, and one might as well argue to the truth of the Amazonian adventure, c. 110 infra, from the nautical correctness of the terminology there, mysalia, lorla, είρεσίη.

9. ἐξαναστάντες. From Olbia, Tyras, etc. Stein, who wishes to find room for the Budini west of the Tanais, upon the Borysthenes, sees in this tradition a confirmation of his localisation. But even Hdt. can hardly have forgotten his own assertion in c. 21 supra, that the Budini lived east of the Tanais, beyond Seythia: and Neumann (op. c. p. 91) long ago pointed out that they form a link or station in the great trade-route that ran N. E. from the Pontos to the Ural

103. 2. pheroproaylovor. "Qui mangent de la vermine" Larcher; "they eat liee" Rawlinson. C. Ritter (Vorhalle, etc. Berlin 1820, p. 154) was the first to suggest that $\phi \text{$\exititt{$\text{$\e cites Strabo and Arrian for the existence of a tribe on Caucasus named oferpood. you near a town named Hereoes, and rolds Phot. lex. φθείρ, ὁ τῆς πίτυσς κάρπος. The real or at least the first question must be: What did Hdt. understand by the word! The practice ascribed c. 168 infra to the women of the Adyrmachidae, cp. note ad l., in the absence of any clearer indication of his according may be taken as a fair commeaning, may be taken as a fair com-mentary on the word here. If it be said that the supros mirros was edible, it may be replied that so is the obelp, nor is it quite obvious why poels, vegetable, is a better antithesis to siros than poels, animal. Finally, vermin-cating is a not uncommon practice (Usear Peschel,

4. το χρῶμα. We cannot argue from this that πυρρὸς in c. 108 must refer to the colour of the skin, for the contrast is not fully drawn out- ylauxds there and lon here being left unrelated.

ind . . καλεόμενοι. 'There are Greeks who make the mistake of ealling

On this passage Stein quotes Neumann pp. 92 f. as showing that on the upper courses of the Don otters and beavers and elk (Elend), not to say wolves and bears, were found as late as 1380. If any stress were to be laid on the locality the fanns would make against his transfer of the Budini to the Borysthenes. But no doubt these animals were formerly spread over a wide area, and this passage affords in reality a poor argument for the identifica-tion of Gelonus, and its site, either way. 9. τετραγωνοπρόσωπα. Stein think, points to a distorted description of the elk: Rawlinson hints at 'seals.' Is it anything more than a judicious et caetera? Cp. for such a 110. 1. Σανροματίων. The Sauromatae were south of the Budini, east of the Palus Macotis, or rather of the Tanais, vide cc. 21 supra, 116 infra. That the two statements are not quite consistent, is only a fresh illustration of the fact that Hdt. draws on varying sources without always harmonising them. It might appear that "a custom of the women," in which they differed widely from the South arches. might appear that "a custom of the women," in which they differed widely from the Seyths, whom yet they in many respects resembled, suggested to the Greeks this entertaining fable of their origin, which Hdt. here inserts according to his wont, quite oblivious of the ineansistency in which he hereby is involved. For according to this is involved. For according to this story the Scyths are in possession of Scythia in the time of the Amazons, and of Herakles; whereas, according to the view to which Hdt. has previously committed himself, the Scyths had immigrated into Scythia in compara-tively recent times, c. 11 supra (Neu-

Sauromatae: but the historic fact of a primitive pairing season inter alia may fairly be read in this legend. A charming story has been told by Addison, Spectator, No. 433, in which he more than hints at the said 'pairing season,' of which Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, c. ii., has made a good deal: in justice to Ed. Greswell, it should be observed that he long ago collected a vast amount of evidence on the matter, see Origines Kal. Hell. vi.

position of the Sauromatae at the date of the story is here very exactly indicated; yet it is not quite plain whether we are to conceive them as three days' or as six days' journey beyond the Tanais, which appears, in either case, as the eastern boundary of Scythia. Probably the former. In c. 21 supra the territory of the Sauromatae begins immediately beyond the Tanais, and extends fifteen days [3000 st., 375 mill. pass.] north from the Palus.

Σαυρομάται, Sauromedes. Northern Medes = Sauromatae = Sarmatae = Slaves, Rawlinson n. o to c. 117. If this were so, in the compuest of S. Russia, and the Danubian region, these 'Medes,' centuries after, fulfilled the intentions with which Dareios, according to Hdt., set out, viz. to punish the Seyths for their invasion of Media, c. 1 supra. On the Sarmatae see Smith's Diet. Geogr. sub v., and Forbiger, in Pauly, Real-Encyclop. sub v., Fape's Worterbuch d. gr. Eigenn. 1347, 1354, Mullenhoff, Deutsch, All. iii. 101 ff., and Appendix I. infra.

118. 1. &v. Narrative resumed from c. 102 supra. With some very trifling verbal changes the speech which follows would have done admirably in the mouth of an Athenian addressing the congress at the Isthmos, before the invasion of Xerxes. It is difficult to suppose that the parallel was not latent in the historian's mind, or in his sources: it is not unreasonable to conjecture that the later situation has coloured the marrative of the earlier and remoter campaign. (A similar situation upon a smaller scale is sketched in the Corinthian speech, Thuc. 1. 120.) It must be admitted that the Scythian envoys very skilfully refute the view put forward by Hdt. in c. 1 supra. The harmonist may, however, say that the one passage gives the respectable, the other the real, reason: thus both are admissible! The Scythian view is rejected in favour of the Herodotean by a majority of the council, c. 110. Such likewise to a certain extent was the practical maxim of the Peloponnesians in 480 n.c. In fact why the Scythians should appear in the guise of petitioners before this congress of kings it would be hard to say, unless it be because their case is analogous to the Athenian attitude towards the Peloponnesians at a period, subsequent indeed to the date of the events here narrated, but prior to the date at which this narrative came into being. Cp. Introduction, § 17.

4. τὰ φρέατα . . καὶ τὰς κρήνας. Leaving all the rivers however (ce. 47-57 supræ) for the benefit of the Persian. This plan of eampaign is rather calculated for Greece, where there were no rivers to speak of, than for Seythia: at least it could hardly have been devised by any one acquainted with Seythia, though it is consistent with the bare map of Seythia, sketched above, cc. 99-101

There were three territorial divisions in ἡ βασίληλη, each under its own king, the greatest under Idanthyrsos, who has a sort of superiority over the others: the next probably that under Skopasis: the third under Taxakis, cp. c. 6 supra. The liegemen of Skopasis together with the Sauromatae, c. 116, are apparently thought of as almost equal to the following of Idanthyrsos reinforced by the contingent of Taxakis, and the Budini+Geloni.

7. Zavpopáras ought to include men and maidens, ec. 116, 117 supra, but the story of the campaign takes no account of women combatants: this is a great opportunity lost, and a fresh evidence that the legend of the Sauromatae above is an insertion from a different source, and no part of the original narrative of the campaign.

The former seems intended; but in the sequel this is the last thing they attempt. In fact, as Rawlinson points out (vol. iii. p. 100) "the Sauromatae, Budini and Geloni are even the first sufferers. (Infra chs. 122, 123.)" This only shows how inconsequent the narrative is. To explain such inconsequence is not easy. Dareios had to be taken all over Seythia: on the other hand good Hellenie strategy might have commended the plan here indicated, for application to 'Medizers.'

4. πλην δσα. This looks like a bit of rationalism: all sent away except what they wanted for food; as if they knew just how many that would be: yet afterwards they have enough and to spare. Cp. c. 130 in fra. But perhaps they were not sent very far! The gen. with $\pi \rho \dot{\sigma} i$ is noticeable. Some twenty days or less would have taken them out of Scythia, c. 101 supra. Were they not to go right away north, but to keep moving along the north line, inside their own frontier, or perhaps on the edge of the deserts? This grammatical refinement is difficult to maintain in the light of the recurrent phrase, c. 125 infra alel το προς βορέω έλαθνειν, "immer in nordlicher Richtung zu ziehen" Bachr; "to keep marching, without change of course, to the north" Rawlinson; "proceed continually towards the north wind" Macaulay. Such direction would have landed them in deserts, or in the lands των άπειπαμένων την συμμαxiav, through which the Persians were to be led. Obviously there is here an inconsequence in the story, or between the story and the geography.

122. 2. τριῶν ἡμερίων. These three days would have taken the Persians on to the steppe between the Danube and the Dniestr, into Ressarabia. To this region, as Stein here points out, Strabo, 305, confines the trans-Danubian adventures of Dareios: misled, we may add, by an excessive rationalism. Nor is it easy, while admitting fully the contra-dictions and improbabilities of the Herodotean narrative, to describe it with Stein as a fabulous creation of Saythian vanity (Ruhmredigheit). Greeks had vanity (Ruhmredigkeit). Greeks had more to say to this fable than Seyths, to judge by the internal evidences, and even perhaps the general probabilities.

- 3. ούτοι, εс. οί Σκέθαι.
- 7. plav. The one under Skopasis, which included the Sauromatae.

8. πρὸς ἡῶ τε καλ τοῦ Τ. is MSS. reading. One preposition with two different cases is rather startling. Stein therefore suggests that Hdt. wrote 100 Tardidos, cp. c. 120 supra. May it not be that there is a combination of an absolute direction (προς ήω) with a relative direction (προς του Τανάιδος)? Cp. c. 121

Between the Istros and the Tanais the Seyths and the Persians would have had to cross, on the historian's own showing (cc. 51-57 supra) at least six rivers, of which this story takes no account. The distance on the most favourable computation for a single traveller may be reckoned, on the historian's own showing, at twenty days, c. 101 supra; for huge armies such as are here in motion at least twice as much time is to be allowed. The territory of the Sauromatae ex-tended fifteen days' journey from the mouth of the Tanais (c. 21 supra) northwards. What was the extent of the territory of the Budini is not mentioned : but the statement on the same subject, c. 22 supra, which proves only that statements drawn from different sources do not always contradict each other.

όσον μεν δή χρόνον οι Πέρσαι ήισαν διά της Σκυθικής 123 καὶ τῆς Σαυρομάτιδος χώρης, οί δὲ εἶχον οὐδὲν σίνεσθαι ἄτε της χώρης ἐούσης χέρσου ἐπείτε δὲ ἐς τὴν τῶν Βουδίνων χώρην ἐσέβαλλον, ἐνθαῦτα δὴ ἐντυχόντες τῶ ξυλίνω τείχεϊ, έκλελοιπότων τῶν Βουδίνων καὶ κεκενωμένου τοῦ τείχεος πάντων, 5 ενέπρησαν αὐτό. τοῦτο δὲ ποιήσαντες είποντο αἰεὶ τὸ πρόσω κατά στίβου, ές δ διεξελθόντες ταύτην ές την έρημον απίκοντο. ή δὲ ἔρημος αὕτη ὑπὸ οὐδαμῶν νέμεται ἀνδρῶν, κέεται δὲ ὑπὲρ τής Βουδίνων χώρης ἐοῦσα πλήθος ἐπτὰ ἡμερέων όδοῦ. ὑπὲρ δὲ της ερήμου Θυσσαγέται οἰκέουσι, ποταμοί δε εξ αὐτῶν τέσσερες 10 μεγάλοι ρέοντες δια Μαιητέων εκδιδούσι ές την λίμνην την καλεομένην Μαιήτιν, τοίσι οὐνόματα κέεται τάδε, Λύκος 'Οαρος Tavais Supyes.

10. Ovorayeras. Cp. c. 22 supra. The geography introduced here is like an afterthought, probably from a fresh source. The Maietae must be located between the Sarmatae on the north, c. 21 supra, and the Sindi on the south, cc. 28-Si supra.

Syrgis has appeared before as the Hyrgis, c. 57, the two passages being obviously independent. Hansen, Ost-Europa, § 85, suggests that the final s in Távais is the source of an error here. Ouros might pass for the name of the Wolga which flows into the Caspian. The identity of the Lykes is lost. Forbiger, Alte Geogr. iii. 1115, is worth consulting.

124. 3. relxea érelxee. Even those prepared to extend Hdt.'s travels liberally draw the line at these forts (cp. Rawlinson ad I.) and notwithstanding the remarkable formula, των έτι ές έμε τὰ ερείπια σὸα ην, deny that he can have seen the remains which he here describes. Two further questions arise: whether Darcios built these, or any such, forts; and whether the forts described in the text ever existed at all. In regard to the first question: "it is extremely un-likely that any forts were built in Seythia by Darius" (Rawlinson). It is of course still more unlikely that Darcies built any forts far beyond Scythia, be-yond Sauromatae, Budini, on the edge of the desert, on the banks of the Oaros. It is in fact absolutely incredible. But did these erections exist in Hdt.'s own day? That 'mined barrows' existed within and beyond the confines of Seythia is indeed highly probable; but that there existed on the banks of the Oaros eight such ruins at regular distances of about sixty stadii, or seven and half R. miles, seems less probable. Hdt, does not mention the material of which these remains consisted. It may perhaps be that some confusion between tumuli or barrows, and some stations on a trade-route, underlies the suspicious symmetry of these distances (cp. the Libyan cases, c. 181 infra). Anyway these archaeological remains, which would be such admirable evidence, if only they were genuine, throw some light upon the character of Hdt.'s materials and methods, not altogether to his credit: and the personal formula here (των ετι ες εμε τα ερείπια σδα ην), which suggests autopsy, and yet is dis-allowed even by the least sceptical Herodotean critics, may justify scepti-cism in other less clear cases. The words have been bracketed by Valckenaer, Dietsch, Stein, and others. But all the MSS. exhibit them: the phrase may very well have become notorious and proverbial long before Hdt.'s time, and we are not to assume that the later authors all took the anecdote from him, indeed the variations in the phraseology seem to show that they are not quoting him.

130. 1. ταῦτα . . πολίμου. This short sentence has occasioned the commentators a good deal of trouble. Larcher remlers: "Mais c'étoit un foible avantage." Rawlinson: "it was not without some little influence on the progress of the war." Bachr gives practically the same in his German translation: "Es hatte diess innerthing in the same in his comments and translation in the same in his derman translation." einen, wenn auch geringen Einfluss auf die Führung des Kriegs." These renderings all take raêra as nominative and as the subject of cocparro. Schweig-houser, Gaisford and Bachr, ed. and la, take raira as object and of Hepau (understood) as subject of the verb. "Atque hoc, leve quidem, sed aliquid tamen ad belli successum Persae adepti sunt." So apparently L. & S. "this sunt." So apparently L. & S. "this they received as a small help towards the war," p. 1663. Stein also takes this view of the grammar, but understands επί σμικρον τοῦ πολεμοῦ of time: 'these ent σμικρον τοῦ πολεμοῦ of time: 'these were the advantages which the Persians gained for quite a short time (for the horses soon grew necessaries).' Stein also would transfer the sentence πολλάκις (οπ. δέ)... είδος so as to take the place of the sentence bracketed in e. 129 supra. Mr. Macaulay renders: ''So far then the Persians had the advantage for a small part of the war" and gives as an alternative: "with some slight effect on the course of the war."

There are two objections to taking ratra as the subject of eperouro: (1) the neut, with the pl. verb, (2) the use of the middle voice. The second seems insuperable; otherwise we might interpret this passage in the light of S. 62 τδ πῶν ἡμῶν τοῦ πολέμου φέροισι αἰ νῆες. But this passage may serve to show that σμικρόν τι τοῦ πολέμου is not there to be taken temporally. I suggest therefore as the sense: 'The Persians gained very little in (by) these feats towards deciding the war, i.e. it was little that the Persians gained for the real issue by the braying of their assess and mules. This interpretation seems to add wheterical to the appropriate of the real issue by the braying of their assess and mules. This interpretation seems to add wheterical to the appropriate of the properties of the response to the appropriate of the properties of the properties and the properties of the pro a rhetorical to the grammatical advantage.

5. τοιάδε. They must have starved themselves to feed the Fersians, for they had only kept just enough for their own wants, c. 121 supra, to say nothing of the inconsequence of their action, in keeping their enemies' table supplied. Larcher defends the passage against Wesseling who wanted to amond it on some such rationalistic grounds, and Bachr 2 supports Larcher. Such rationalism is indeed misplaced. The passage wants no amending; it is perfectly of a piece with the whole story of the campaign: it is necessary to fill up to the brim the cup of folly and confusion which is here presented to the Great King, for

6. νομέων. Presumably slaves. The indication accords imperfectly with the rationale of Scythian slavery given c, 2

The bird the horse in rapidity, and the horse might be taken as the most valuable possession of the Seyth. Darcios is not yet out of his optimistic vein (ep. c. 88 supra): but he might have realised that if the Seyths had meant a horse they would have sent a horse.

7. συνεστήκεε. See L. & S. sub v. B. H. 2. p. 1494. Gobryas was something more than one of the Seven; he was the one who, if the story in 3, 78 be true, in the supreme moment had nearly given his life for Darcios. He was the son of one Mardonios (Marduniyahya: Behistun Inser, col. 4, § 15), and the fither of another, whose name was familiar to every Greek, 6. 43 and 7.9 passim. According to 7. 2 Dareios had married a daughter of Gobryas before he came to the throne.

11. Sixaia. Their conduct involving I breach of faith-to the Seyths.

The Ionians by their refusal are to some extent made responsible for the subsequent invasion of Greece; though to be quite accurate Dareios apparently made no subsequent expedition in person (aeror ep. e. 1 supra). But the whole moral is obvious: had the Ionians acted on the advice of the Scyths, repeated with every circumstance calculated to make it impressive and acceptable, there never would have been a Persian invasion of Greece, cp. c. 142 infra. To be sure it was the Despots who were to blame: the cities preferred Democracies, e. 137. The story and its moral are largely coloured by Afterthought, and the philosophy of the passage is almost unimpeachable: mais, ce n'est pas l'histoire. Cp. Introduction, p. lxvi.
16. θεοίσι τε και Σκύθησι. Is there nothing intentionally humorous in this

137. 1. Μιλτιάδεω μέν. Thirlwall (Hist. of Greece, vol. ii. App. 2) long ago pointed out the prognatic tendency of this story, and traced it to its probable source. It was, one may almost say, doubtless, used on the occasion of the trial of Miltiades for 'tyranny' in the Chersonese, to which he was subject on his return to Athens in 493-2 s.c., cp. 3. 101 infra. That he should really have taken the line here ascribed to him at the Ister in 512 R.C. and remained still undisturbed for twenty years in possession of the repairly in the Cher-sonese, is well nigh incredible. Upon this subject see further notes to l.c. Introduction, p. lxxxvi. Appendix III, §14.

 'Αθηναίου. If the advice of the Athenian had been taken the liberty of Ionia would have been taken the norty of Ionia would have been secured there and then, without all the subsequent trouble. Athenians had ever been the champions of Ionia: it was well that this should be remembered.

5. 8tà Aapstov. It was to their interest to maintain the king's power upon which their own depended. The dependence of the Greek tyrannis in the Asiatic towns upon the foreign supremacy, and not in the Asiatic towns alone, was a familiar truism of Greek thought at the time, and no doubt contributed to the unpopularity of the tyrannis, which this whole story was well calculated to augment and maintain. See further, c. 165 infra, 5. 27, 96, 6. 102.

140. l. Σκύθαι. The whole forces under the three kings, with their allies, are present on this occasion. As the more impressive demonstration, and in fact the climax of the narrative, the author has shown his art in enlarging at this point upon the Scythian offer: but surely debate and discussion, if there ever was any on the question, must have taken place on the first occasion, where nothing of the kind is hinted, Miltiades and everybody remaining silent, c. 133 supra ad fin. . . . (A somewhat similar situation is shown in the unreported and reported councils at Salamis :

4. rd (Sara. Cp. c. 120 supra. The adverse criticism on the Scyths is necessarily unjust, the supposed facts of the case being impossible, but the dramatic situation and moral are charming, and have presumably helped the production of the story. Anyway the Ionians alone were not to blame for the escape of the Persians: a Greek strategist would have managed things better (cp. ec. 46, 95 supra, Introduction, pp. lxvi.

11. τον πρότερον κτλ. This is an inconsequence. According to the story the Persians left the Danube and followed the one division of Scyths eastward and across the Tanais, returned along the north side of Scythia as far as the frontier of the Agathyrsi (the Carpathians) and now retreating due south (or even from the north-west), they same back on the same track as they come back on the same track as they had made going east (or north-east). If Dareios returned by the way by which he had gone, he did not go eastward: if he went eastward he did not return by the same way: at least if he went to the Carpathians, after all the most probable terminus ad quem. See Appendix III. § 16.

141. 1. ἡν δὲ περὶ Δαρεῖον κτλ. Are there many finer situations in historic literature than this? The fate of the King of Kings, and of the flying remnants of the Asiatic host trembling in the balance; vengeance behind, the impassable river in front, the great cry of the Egyptian rending the night: and the wakeful Milesian, on the watch for his Lord; no need to call him twice!

2. φωνίων . . καλίων. Generic, specific. Men with loud voices were much esteemed in antiquity: Artachaees the esteemed in antiquity: Artachaces the Persian, who thirty years afterwards had the loudest voice in the world, was worshipped by the Akanthians 7, 117. One misses the name of this Egyptian Stentor. He was perhaps of the class of Interpreters, 2, 154.

77 supra, 144 infra. The remark may have been current in Sparta : at least it has a Doric ring. But the sneer was singularly unjust, as the Ionic revolts proved. What is not found in Hdt, is the story of the surrender of the Asiatic Dorians to the Persian.

5. dSρηστα μάλιστα, 'least given to running away from their masters.' Stein's editio miner drops μάλιστα. "Operarum errore" van Heiwerden.

6. Extôpor. There is perhaps some humour in putting this tount into the mouth of the very men who have just before been themselves trunted as runaways, c. 126 supra. But they were masters of the art (c. 46 supra), as indeed the whole campaign showed. Scythian slaves were not unknown in Greece: but there seems no consciousness of their presence in the narrative.

143. 1. διά τῆς Θρηίκης. Why Dareies who had retraced his track to the Danube struck out a fresh way through Thrace, neither Hdt. nor his sources here reveal. The reason perhaps was that the bridge over the Bosporos had been destroyed (cp. Ktesias, Persica, 17, ed. Gilmore, p. 151), and Byzantion and Challedon were in revolt, together with other of the 'Hellespontine' towns. Cp. 5. 26 infra. Stein argues from 6. 10 that the Scyths pursued the king as far as the Hellespont: see note ad l.c.

9. την Έλλάδα betrays the Greek provenance of this aneedote: probably from the same source as the next : viz. Byzantion (Ελλησποντίων next c.) -80,000 men, a respectable corps d'armée to be in fighting trim after the Scythian fiasco! $0,000 is the figure at which Ktesias, Pars. 17, and Tregus Pomp. (Justin. 2. 5) put the king's lesses in

144. 2. ἀθάνατον μνήμην. Could anything indicate more strikingly Hdt.'s passion for a bon mot? One would suppose that the subsequent operations of Megabazos in Thrace (5, 1 ff.) might have contributed to keep his name in remembrance. The Persian must have made this remark on the way to Scythia. as Byzantion was not recovered by him but by his successor Otanes 5, 26 infra. The bon mot was afterwards appropriated by the Delphie oracle (for one cannot suppose that Hdt, would have trans-ferred an immortal witticism from the god to a barbarian): Strabo, 320.

Hdt. 1. 2 puts the voyage one generation before the Trojan war, Here he conceives the 'sons' sons' of the Argonauts as coming to Sparta after the Dorian conquest and Return of the Herakleidae, just in fact at the the Herakleidae, just in fact at the majority of the Twins.

Hekataies had dealt with the saga of the Argonauts if the Schol. on Apollon. Rhod. be trusted. Hdt. may have him in view here, cp. Hecataei Frag. 187. (Muller, F. H. O. i. 132.) 6. τῶν ἐκ Βραυρῶνος. Cp. 6. 137 infra. The words τῶν . ἐξελασθέντες are not unlike a gloss. Van Herwerden

7. ἐν τῷ Τηϋγέτῳ, εε. δρει. It was not necessary that Hdt. should specify that Taygetes was a mountain, but it is not obvious on what point or part of Taygetes the fire is to be located. The highest summit of the mountain, anc. Taleton, mod. St. Elias (7902 ft.), is above Sparta: oddly enough the district between Taleton and Evoras (Mount Paximadhi, the highest summit next to St. Elias) was called Theras. Taleton (St. Elias, still the scene of an annual pilgrimage) was sacred to the Sun. Pausan. 3. 20, 5. Cp. Smith, Diet. Geogr. sub v. LACONIA.

9. Deyov. Speaking Greek of course; so that in their case the mother tongue had not prevailed? But Hdt. does not think of these things. Cp. c, 133 supra.

15. δικαιότατον. They had a just claim on their fathers, though πατέραs is rather straining a point.

They fail to answer the part of the question referring to the fire. Blakesley regards it as "a symbol of the Hepharstosworship brought from the volcanic island of Lemnos." But not by immigrants after the Dorian invasion, surely: besides, one might light a fire on Taygeton without wanting to worship it. Was They fail to answer the part of the sides, one might light a fire on Taygeton without wanting to worship it. Was it, however, connected with the Sunworship (see above)! The sense of any such connexion has obviously disappeared in the story as told by Hdt.

17. Λακδαιμονίοισι. This passage has been gravely quoted as an exception to the rule of Spartan citizenship stated 9. 35, as though these Minyae in the Peloponnese had really immigrated.

9. 35, as though these Minyae in the Peloponnese had really immigrated and been admitted into the Sparton (Dorian) franchise! For a similar case at Athens ep. 5. 57. It is, however, far from certain that Spartan civiles was restricted to pure Dorians.

19. των Τυνδαριδίων ή ναυτιλίη. The motive here cannot be historical, but the statement none the less illustrates a kind of appeal that was popular with Hellenie audiences even long after Hdt.'s day; audiences even long arter 1141.8 day; specially when there were sound reasons for the line of action demanded on mythological precedents or principles. Or sometimes the myth served as an excuse for inaction. For instances op. 5. 43, 79, 94, 6. 137 ff., 7. 159, 9, 24, 27. Their relationship with the Tyndaridae would not have given the Minyae a lieu would not have given the Minyas a lien on Dorian land, or women, except so far as the Dorian conquerors had adopted Minyan traditions and institutions τάς δέ. Not their wives but their sisters? The passage is interesting as showing that the early refugees were not always thought of as voyaging without women (ep. 1, 146); and also as further evidence of the mixed descent of Spartan citizens. Cp. c. 140 infra.

21. oukás. As they were given Dorian wives (according to the saga) the word might include the Dorian tribes.

146. 3. καὶ ἄλλα. One would at least like to know the other charges against them: specially if connected with cult and worship (cp. 5. 72, 6. 81). It was just in the kingship at Sparta that the non-Dorian clement was nominally represented. See 5. 72 infra.

5. κτείνουσι. Nicolas of Damascus is the (weak) authority for the state-

The supreme penalty was (we may assume) rarely if ever enforced against Spurtiatae, Hdt.'s remark in its own way illustrates το κριπτόν της πολιτείας. It furnishes also a suggestive example of the necessity of reading a general statement in the light of its context: divorced therefrom, this statement would be absurd. Whether the state-ment is taken over by Hdt. from his source, or inserted by him proprio motu, is a curious point, cp. Introduction, p.

7. doral . . Ouyarépes. The words imply prima facie that the women were Dorians, the πρωτεία, some difference of rank among the Spartiatae.

9. ἀκάστη... ἀνδρί. Strict monogamy is implied (cp. 5. 40). K. O. Muller, Orchaments, p. 307, believing that the Minyae were immigrants, discredits the saga here told, by pointing out that commission between Spartans and transcent was a proposition. strangers was impossible. But the commbium is just one of the most significant traits in the saga, one of the data, so to speak, which the saguundertakes to explain; a fact which, however, may be thought to prove that the Minyae were not immigrants admitted to Dorian franchise, but part of the prac-Dorian population. Cp. c. 149 infra. The conduct of these Spartan

(Dorian) wives is a splendid contrast to the σχέτλιον έργον of the Lemnian women τδ έρη άσαντο al γεναίκες τούς άμα Θάαντι ανδρας σφετέρους ἀποκτείνασαι, 6. 138 infra, where see note. Plutarch, de Virt. Mulier. viii. (Mor. 247), gives a tradition differing in many particulars from the Herodotean, but betraying

3. τῆς μητρὸς ἀδελφεός. Theras stood in the relation of Avanculus to the fatherless family. The importance of the mother's brother, which is, of course, not adequately explained by the death of Aristodemos, points to a matriarchal society: cp. Bachofen, Antiquarische Briefe, xix. xlvii. If. When K. O. Müller, Orcham² p 300, says that the relation in which Theras is put to the Herakleid kings is reine Dichtung des Darischen Nationalepos Dichtung des Dorischen Nationalepos (pure imagination in the Derian national epos), we must qualify the term rain (pure) by remembering that the epos will have imitated real situations, claims, and customs; and the term Nationalepos, by remembering that the Dorians had none of their own, but accepted the non-Dorian, and made the best of it, from their own point of View.

10. τῆ νῦν Θήρη κ. What remains of it is now called Santorin: see H. F. Tozer, Islands of the Augean, c. v.; Theodore Bent, The Uyelades, c. vi.; though there is a tendency to revive the ancient name.

11. Kallory. Mr. Bent (op. c. p. 114) describes this volcanic island as "hideous" but "fascinating in its hideousness." Mr. Tozer (op. c. p. 108) suggests that the old name was "n euphemistic expression," but adds that the vineyards and the harbour of the island wight curvely expression. island might supply an explanation. The utilitarian seems more probable than the aesthetic reason. Cp. c. 157

18. okrà à àvôpâv. K. O. Müller, Orchom.² p. 319, makes out nine: 1 Kadmos, 2 Polydoros, 3 Labdakos, 4 Laios (see Hdt. 5. 59), 5 Oedipus (Hdt. 5. 60), 6 Polyneikes, 7 Thersandros, 8 Tisamenos, 9 Autesion, 10 Theras. Stein follows him. Nine generations would be just 300 years.

Rawlinson ad I, defends the discrepancy by observing that there might be ten (nine) generations at Thebes and only eight at Kalliste-Thera. This would be odd, Hdt.'s allowance being three generations to the century (2. 142): but it is possible that there is the frequent confusion of reigns and generations at the bottom of the anomaly, and it may the bottom of the anomaly, and it may be observed that there were eight Battiadae in Kyrene, Thera's colony, covering a period of less than two centuries, 632-460 μ.e. Cp. c. 163 infra.

148. 2. φυλίων. Rawlinson remarks: "The three old Porian tribes, Hyllaei, Dymanes, and Pamphyles, must here be meant": of that there can be little doubt. But whether this meaning is according to facts, or consistent with according to facts, or consistent with the context, are further questions. Is it conceivable that the Dorian element in Sparta was thus weakened in the presence of hostile Minyae, Areadians, etc. by a levy for a colony, long before the Dorians had really made themselves masters of Laconia?—To say nothing of their taking refuge together with the Lemnians, with whom they have just been quartelling, under a discontented Kadmeian, and expecting a welcome in a Phoenician island! Of course when Hdt. is writing, Thera passes for a Dorian settlement, and Dorian Sparta for its metropolis; and no doubt the dulal here mentioned are ex hypothesi the Dorian tribes: but the statement is pragmatic, a part of the Dorian (Spartan) claim to Thera. έξελων αὐτοὺς ἀλλά κάρτα οἰκηιεύμενος. ἐπείτε δὲ καὶ οί Μινύαι εκδράντες εκ της έρκτης ίζουτο ες το Τηθγετον, των Λακεδαιμονίων βουλευομένων σφέας απολλύναι παραιτέεται ό 5 Θήρας, δκως μήτε φόνος γένηται, αὐτός τε ύπεδέκετό σφεας έξάξειν έκ της χώρης. συγχωρησάντων δέ τη γνώμη των Λακεδαιμονίων, τρισί τριηκοντέροισι ές τους Μεμβλιάρου άπογόνους έπλωσε, ούτι πάντας άγων τούς Μινύας άλλ' όλίγους τινάς. οί γὰρ πλεθνες αὐτῶν ἐτράποντο ἐς τοὺς Παρωρεάτας 10 καὶ Καύκωνας, τούτους δὲ ἐξελάσαντες ἐκ τῆς χώρης σφέας αὐτοὺς ἐξ μοίρας διείλου, καὶ ἔπειτα ἔκτισαν πόλιας τάσδε ἐν αὐτοίσι, Λέπρεον Μιίκιστον Φρίξας Πύργον Επιον Νούδιον. τουτέων δὲ τὰς πλεῦνας ἐπ' ἐμέο Ἡλεῖοι ἐπόρθησαν. τῆ δὲ νήσω έπλ τοῦ οἰκιστέω Θήρα ή ἐπωνυμίη ἐγένετο. ὁ δὲ παῖς 149 ου γαρ έφη οι συμπλεύσεσθαι, τοιγαρών έφη αυτον καταλείψειν όιν έν λύκοισι. έπὶ τοῦ ἔπεος τούτου ούνομα τῷ νεηνίσκω τούτω Οιόλυκος εγένετο, καί κως τὸ ούνομα τοῦτο επεκράτησε. The Minyae in the Peleponnese, i.e. the representatives of a culture which had been traced in Bocotia, Lemnos, Thera, and other islands, were perhaps descendants of immigrants, in regard to whom it was perceived that they did not constitute the most primitive and subordinate stratum in the population (Kaukones, Paroreatae), while they were resulted distinct form the Designs.

14. et 'tµ'o. A lamentably vague date. The small local business on the W. of Peloponnese here recorded would hardly have obtained special notice if it had been an old story at the time of Hdt.'s visit to Sparta where he perhaps heard about it: the Spartans concealing any part they themselves had in the matter. Stein would date it 460 n.c. after the third Messenian war (assumed to have lasted not ten but only four years: Thuc. 1. 103). It was surely not unconnected with the Synockism of Elis, and the establishment of the Eleian democracy about the year 472 R.C. (cp. Rusolt, Gr. G. ii. 371 ff.): and certainly marks a moment when Spartan influence and power were depressed. Cp. Introduction, p. lyiv.

149. 5. Alγείδαι. There were Aigeidae in Thebes, in Kyrene, in Thera, in Akragas, as well as in Sparta, all professing to be hereditary priests of Karneian Apollo (Orchom.² p. 321): yet according to Hdt. the name was derived from Aigeus son of Oiolykos son of Theras. This is the local Spartan version (Pausan. 3. 15, 8) and at variance with the tradition in Pindar, Isth. 6. (7.) 15 (not himself a member of the clan, Pyth. 5. 75 notwithstanding vide F. Studniczka, Kyrene, pp. 73 ft.), and with Hdt.'s own record of Aigeidae in Thera. Blakesley, from overlooking this latent contradiction, wants to relegate τώμετο... γεγονόσε to the margin as a gloss.

6. έν Σπάρτη. Pindar, who perhaps is following the local Kyrenasan tradition, makes the Aigeidae accompany the Herakleidae into Lacedaemon. This according to K. O. Muller (op. c. p. 225) is grandfalsch. According to Müller's reconstruction, the Aigeidae came into Lakonia a generation before the Dorians : on the invasion of the latter they took refuge with Achaeans and Minyans in Amyklae, entered into special relations with the Herakleids, and after the con-quest of Ausyklae became a (Dorian) phratry in Sparta. The 'Minyan' colonisation of Thera he places before

Nay, he might give it, on grounds of internal evidence, or of external authority, as the Theraean story, no matter how he came by it. (Cp. Introduction, pp. lxxvii. ff.) Cobet omits

6. Εὐφημῶης is an emendation borrowed (by Palmer) from Pindar, Pyth.

4. 455. The MSS. have Εὐνημόης (one Εὐθνημόρης). Blakesley protests against the alteration. K. O. M. calls it: "Palmerius' unbestreitbare Emendation" (Orchom.² p. 395 n.). The emendation" (Orchom.² p. 395 n.). tion" (Orchom.2 p. 395 n.). The emenda-tion may be incorrect in the sense that Hdt. made a slip (through oblivion or ignorance) and wrote Etteritys. He does not appear to know Pindar's ode, ep. c. 154 infra. But that he ought to have written Econuions is beyond question.

When the Theraeans in the days of Grinnos and Battos (Ol. 35, K. O. Müller) are represented as knowing nothing of Libya, Hdt. must, as Blakesley remarks, be following a different tradition from that which led him in 2. 50 to derive Poseidon from Libya. That indeed would be manifest without the contradiction: what this proves is how little Hdt. concerned himself to eliminate inconsequences and inconsistencies from his work as a whole. Cp. c. 152 infra.

μετοκων. The use of the word here raises several problems. The date of the application of the Theraeans to the Kretans is long after the Dorisation of both islands. The question arises, who are to be understood by the Metics? At Athens, or in an Athenian story, the meaning would be technical, but metic does not appear as a Kretan term. Are they identical with the meplocker of Aristot. Pol. I.c. whom he describes with some inaccuracy (cp. Hocekh, Kreta, iii. 23 ff.), or with the ἀπέταιροι of the great Gortynian inscription? It is evident that they are persons who may be engaged in commerce, and it will be safe to assume that the word is used here, without prejudice, to include any residents who were not 'Kretans.' L. & S. seem to take the word here in the more definite sense of 'immigrants.' If that were pressed, the 'metics' would include the Dorians; the 'Kretans' might be the aboriginals.' (Perioikoi etc.). The word does not occur elsewhere in Hdt. On the Laws of Gortyn, see H. J. Roby in Law Quarterly Review, ii. 135 ff., J. W. Headlam, J.H.S.

The particularity with which names are given in this story cannot disguise the pragmatic character of the tradition. Whether Korobios was a 'Kretan' or a 'Metic' is not expressly stated, but cp. Appendix XII. It seems improbable that the Kretans and their metics should not have been well acquainted with Libya long before this time, but like other ancient monopolists they perhaps kept their knowledge as much as might be to themselves: and possibly Korobios the metic was bribed rather than bired to give the coveted information. Heeckh (iii, 420) sees in the difficulty with which information about Libya was procured an evidence that the commerce of Krete was at this time (c. 620 B.C.) decayed. It may, indeed, be supposed that the Ionians had damaged it: a Samian ship presently (c. 152) makes its appearance at Platea, cn route for Egypt.

152. 3. vavkAnpos. Probably he was on board, 1. 6, Thue. 1. 137, 2. This was a fortunate accident for Korobios, but it is difficult to understand how a Samian ship sailing towards Egypt (from Samos) should find itself at Bomba, the usual route being ria Rhodes (Kypros), cp. 2. 152, Thue. S. 35, 2, unless indeed the strong E. or N.E. wind was blowing which afterwards drave the Samians all the way to Tartessos: in which case it is difficult to understand why they put to sea again if they really wished to make sea again if they really wished to make Egypt. Blakesley suggests that Kolaios touched at Bomba not on his way to but on his way from Egypt, his line being from Egypt to Krete and then to Samos. This saves one point in the narrative at the expense of another. The whole stands or falls together as tar as the credit of Hot, and his sources for the varieties took are conversed. for the particular story are concerned, though, of course, as usual in such cases, real relations have been incorporated in more or less fictitions records. The probability is that these trade-routes were very much older and known much longer to the Greeks of Asia than Hdt. seems here to recognise. Not to raise remoter problems, since 650 n.c. at least a regular Greek settlement had been maintained in Egypt, and people in Samos at any rate, if not in Thera, must have known where 'Libvans' were to be found: viz. to the west of Egypt.

Carthaginian and perhaps antiprac Carthaginian and perhaps anti-Carthaginian, the rivalry facilitating the intrusion of third parties.

10. artparov. Inaccurate, seeing that the Phoenicians had long held it. The story may be not literally inconsistent with the assertion in regard to the Phokaians, 1. 163 f., seeing that the adventure of Kolaios may be regarded as an isolated one, preceding by someas an isolated one, preceding by something like a quarter of a century the foundation of Massalia, and the Phokaian friendship with Arganthonios. All the same, the point of view and spirit of the two traditions are not harmonious: they ignore if they do not contradict one another. Of this Hdt. does not appear conscious. Cp. c. 150 support, 12. Three points in the colonial decree may be distinguished: (1) Brothers were to draw lots which should go, families wherein there was only one son not being touched. (2) No women accom-panied the expedition: a definite number of men were selected from the seven parishes. What the number was is not stated, at least in our text. Stein suggests that it has fallen out after dropas. o'= oincoolous (Mahaffy and Cobet) is accepted by van Herwerden. The pentekonters have been made the basis of a calculation. Rawlinson allows 200 men as a maximum to a pentekonter, i.e. the complement of a trireme, and is not content with 400 men for a colony: 80 is nearer the mark, cp. 7. 184. This would give 169 meu. But the two pentekonters dwindle to one vessel and its bare complement, 'insignis paucitas,' ap. Justin 13, 7, 4. The smaller the number the better the The smaller the number the better the moral. K. O. Muller by a slip transfers the pentekonters to Theras and his advent to Kalliste, Orchom. P. 304. He has confounded two pentekonters with three trickonters, c. 148. Rawlinson well observes: "The numerical accuracy affected by the Theracan narrative is remarkable," i.e. fictitious. Justin (l.c. supra) this appears as Aristaios (i.c. Apollo, cp. c. 15 supra) son of Kirnos. 'Battos' may be regarded as the native (Libyan) title, cp. c. 155 infra. That monarchy was the form of government from the lirst seems to show that the foundation did not proceed from a republican movement at home, and helps to explain its long or late maintenance in Kyrene.

4. 'Oαξόs. Town situate on a rapid river (Virg. Ec. 1, 66) of the same name, at some distance from the sea. It was connected (like Kyrene) with the worship of Apollo. (Hoeckh, Kreta, i. p. 19.) It was also connected in legend with the name of Minos (vid. Steph. B. sub v. 'Oαξοι) and Hoeckh suggests that it was the last seat of the ancient 'Minoan' monarchy, an inference based apparently upon this passage. For the form 'Agèr given here by β (= RVS) cp. Cauer, Indectus², no. 122, Head, Historia, p. 387.

3. ἐπαλλακεύετο. He could not make ber his wife, she being a foreigner. make her his wife, she being a foreigner. But the result is a shadow over the birth of the founder, as so often in the foundation legends of the colonies, which was deepened by his physical defects (lσχνόφωνοι and τραυλόι). These physical defects are probably an inference from the misinterpretation of his title (Hatter) and are not to be his title (Battos) and are not to be rationalised away into a charge against his Kretan mother.

5. άλλο τι. Hdt. is no doubt right, though it is strange that he should not know the name (Aristoteles, c. 153 supra), and incredible that the Kyrenarans should not have known it. That his informants, or his docuit. That his informants, or his decuments, may have made the assertion is of course possible. That Aristoteles was called Battos prophetically by the Pythia can hardly be regarded as impossible, but if true, seems to imply that something was known in Delphi about Libya and the Libyaus, ep. c. 150 suppra, however ignorant the Theracans were. The 'Kyrenacan' version of the visit of Aristoteles Battes to Delphi differs from the Theraean previously given in the following points: (1) He goes to Delphi on his own account to ask about his voice ($\phi\alpha\gamma version it is the universal ignorance of Libya which leads to disobolience of the god's mandate: here simply the

It is curious that the name Battos occurs in the myths of Arkadia and Messenia, ep. Ovid. Motum. 2, 705, ep. Grasherger, Gr. Ortsnamen, p. 18, E. Curtius, Felopanussas, ii. 198 (note 49 to Landschaft Messenien). Thue, 4. 43, has it as a proper name.

were three visits: (1) Korobios and his Thermean companions οὐ πολλοί e. 151.
(2) The colonists' first visit and departure leaving another man. (3) The colonists for final occupation. But such attempts do not even reconcile the particulars, c.g. the points at which Platea is occupied in the two stories, much less account for the variation, or detect the moral or Tendenz. In any case this one man was to be regarded no doubt as sufficient to assert the proprietary rights of occupation. Cp. passage in Maine, Ancient Law, c. viii. on The Roman principle of Occupancy as the source of the acquisition of sovereign rights in newly discovered countries (pp. 244-250).

It might be argued from the way in which Hdt, arranges the pieces that he considers the Theracan story (150-153) the more probable. Hdt. has not, however, indicated clearly whether it begins after δύο πεντηκοντέροισι, c. 156, or at Illaria, cp. closing words of c. 163, or whether it begins here at anendeor is the battle with the Theracans, and was placed by Menekles, who may have been a rationalising harmonist rather than a a rationalising harmonist rather than a historian with better sources, before the settlement at Platea. Here again the stories can be reconciled by multiplying the visits to Delphi (visit to Delphi; battle off Thera: eccupation of Platea: second visit to Delphi); but such attempts are misplaced ingenuity, where you are dealing with unauthoritative traditions obviously belonging to variant cycles. It is far more likely that such stories, each of which professes to be the whole story, and is in a way complete in itself, should be in a way complete in itself, should be inconsistent with each other, and with facts, than that a complete and consistent and true narrative is to be extracted by combinations and permutations in

7. at Tv. The oracle contains Dorisms on the strength of which K. O. Muller (Orchom.² p. 339) argues that it must be derived from the local oral tradition and not from a Delphic source: as if Attic poets could write Doric on occasion, and the Delphians in a Dorian affair could not produce dialectic congruities! (Sua Dialecto Cyrenaei vel acceperant vel etc., Valckenaer.) Diodor. 8. 20 preserves a longer variant, which suggests a poetic version of the Founda-tion legend (cp. Introduction, p. lxxxv.); but it is as likely that the poem was an expansion of the oracle, as that the oracle was distilled from the poem. Muller must, however, be right in arguing that the oracle dates after the development of the local myth of Apollo and Kyrene, so charmingly utilised by Pindar, Pyth. 9: (for Theraean and Kyrenaean dialects cp. Cauer, Delectus², nos. 141-153). μηλοτρόφον. The trade with Libya

The epithet μηλοτρόφοι is applied to Asia by Archiloches. Fr. 26 [89] (Bergk, ii. 4 p. 390) and Aischylos, Pers. 763 (ep. Φριγγε πολυπροβατώτατα 5. 40 infra). Buchsenschutz, op. c. p. 223, converts the Denneter Melophoros of Megara (Pausan. 1. 44, 3) into a Denneter Melotrophos, a title for which there appears to be no evidence: L. & S. make the goddess bear them apples, perhaps rightly (cp. Preller, Gr. Myth. i. 4 769), though the pussage in Pausanias runs: τούς πρώτους πρώβατα έν τη γή runs: τούς πρώτους πρόβατα έν τη γη θρόψαντας Δήμητρα όνομάται Μαλοφόρον. Pausanias has, however, just before: λόγεται δέ και άλλα ές την επίκλησον.

The natives are here represented as on friendly terms with represented as on friendly terms with the settlers (ep. note c. 153 infra), but the anecdote looks suspiciously like a reply to critics, who wondered that the Greeks had passed by the best spot and chosen an inferior one (cp. aneedote c. 144 supra). Itasa is named by Pindar, Pyth. 9. 106, as πόλις 'Ανταίον. The κρήνη 'Απόλλωνος (cp. Pindar, Pyth. 4. 294) was called κυρή οτ κύρη Bekker, Aned. p. 1173, and gave its name to

cp. Appendix XII.

3. rococros. That the original number of Kyrenaeans remained for fifty six years without increase, or diminution, is a statement so absurd on the face of it that the author must be supposed to have meant something other than he says; perhaps merely that the city remained without ἐποικοι, fresh immigrants; i.e. that the number of κλήςοι remained unaltered.

6. ή Πυθίη. The oracle was set in motion by the Kyrenaeans, and they, presumably, made its favourable response known, perhaps at Pythian or Olympian festival (πάντας Ἰλληνας), ep. 6, 126, 12. γῆν πολλήν. The land to be

12. Λίβνες. Libyans had long had relations with Egypt: they appear among the conquests of Amenophis II. (18th Dynasty) and Ramses II., and contributed by their invasions to the fall of the "Middle Empire." (See Wiedemann, Aegypt. G. 374, 430, 473 ff., and on the present episode, p. 637.) Adikran

15. Άπρίη, 2. 161. In that passage
Hdt promises to recount at greater length (μεζάνως) έν τοισι Λιβυκοίσι λύγοισι the πρόagus which led to the downfall of Apries. Blakesley asks whether this promise can be said to be fulfilled in the meagre account of the affair here given. The difficulty has struck many, and the answer given has often been in the negative, various inferences in regard to the sources and composition of the work following therefrom. But it must be remarked that the real question is whether Hdt, under any circumstances could have thought the promise made in 2.161 to be re-deemed in this place. Now in 2.161 Hdt. does not state the reason of the expedition of the Egyptians against Kyrene at all: here it appears as the application of the Libyans. Further particulars are here given, the name of the Libyan king, the name of the battlefield, and we might add the more remote cause which led to the application of the Libyan king. Unless then we press perhaps unduly the word netovor in 2. 161, we may suppose that in revising his work Hdt. might allow this passage to pass as a sufficient discharge of the debt in-curred in 2. 161, the more so, as on other grounds it may be plausibly maintained that this passage was written before that, though it takes a later place in the final form of his work. (Cp. Bauer, die Entstehung, pp. 66-69.)

This statement has presumably been taken over from his authorities, or allowed to stand by fldt. as originally written, for he could hardly have penned it deliberately for the first time after his researches in Egypt had taught him the position and achievements of Helleuic mercenaries there. Cp. 2, 152. But though he would hardly have written this passage after those, he may have allowed it to pass, in a revision, seeing that πεπειρηutros might be taken to refer to aggressive measures, or at any rate that Έλλήνων might be restricted to free Greeks, Greeks acting on their own account, not mercenaries, like the Ionians and Karians. Yet that Egyptians would have 'despised' Greek soldiers at that date is incredible.

The absence of any reference to 2, 161 would be remarkable, if that passage had been composed before this.

4. 4π' ίωντῶν βαλόμενοι. Cp. 5. 73. Βάρκη. Presumably a native name, a fact which may be in Hdt.'s mind when he says τότε καὶ νῦν. The identity with the surname of the great Hamilkar (Barak) is presumably a mere accident. The seceders evidently had a Lihyan following, and the town no doubt was mixo Libyan. The site of Barke is ascertained to the west of Kyrene: being accurately indicated in Skylax (Muller, Geogr. nin. i. p. 83. Cp. Iriet, Geogr. i. 378). In the Middle Age the name was applied to the whole district. Kiepert, Manual, § 122.

10. Λεόκων Stein suggests may be identified with the Λεκόη of Ptolemy 4. 5, 28, the most westerly of the inland villages of Marmanica: Leukoe must be placed well to the east of Kyrene (as on the map, xix. Tobulor in Geographes minocess. The relation between the foundation of Barka on the west and this battle with the Libyans on the east of Kyrene is obscure: but the carnage of Leukoe is presumably a genuine memory. This τρώμα may be compared with the losses of Argos (6000) G. 83, 7, 148, of the men of Rhegion and Taras (3000+x) 7, 170. The number of Sybarites slain by the men of Kroton (6, 21, 5, 44 f.) is not given by Hdt.

16. Epotá. This chapter (160) has all the points from which a stirring and tragical drama might be composed. The scenery and savage environment: the Hellenic contrasts: the quarrel in the royal family: the battle and slaughter; poison, suicide, treachery and murder by princes and princesses. It is a pity that the Hellenic playwrights never utilised such material. Cp. story of Lykophron (3, 50-53). And yet did they not? Perhaps stories like these coming over sea from Asia and Libya, or preserved among the traditions of the Greek Tyrants, may have given Aischylos and Sophokles, poets of a demogratic republic, a livelier comprehension of legends which for pious or practical reasons they revived out of the ancient and common stock of all Hellenes. The influence of the Greek Drama upon the Historians has been often emphasised, but the influence of the Greek Historians upon the Dramatists has not been sufficiently considered. Cp. Introduction, p. laxiii.

The relations between Haliarches (Laarchos) and Arkesilaos were differently described in the sources followed by Plutarch, de mulier. virt. xxv. Eryxo (Mor. 260). Laurchos is not his brother, but a treacherous friend, who usurped the tyranny, nominally as guardian of Battos, and intrigued with Eryxo, but was by her entrapped to his death.
According to Hall himself the brothers of Arkeniages had a himself the brothers of Arkesilaos had retired to Barca.

The sequel of the story, after the death of Laacehos, is told by Plutarch l. c. very differently from Hdt. There is no mention of Demonax or his legislation:
Battos is proclaimed king énl rois marploss, and Polyarchos, the eldest brother of the late king, who has conspired with Eryxo to overthrow Laurehos, restores the original constitution (Tip άπ' ἀρχής πολιτείαν ὁ Πολιαρχος ἀπέδωκε τοις Κυρηναίοις). Shortly afterwards they effected a reconciliation with Amasis, who, according to Plutarch, has supported Laarchos. (Cp. 2. 181, where a history is preserved which, quite in accord with Hdt,'s methods, finds no place nor echo here.) The history of kypene, as told in Diet. Geogr. i. 734 f., takes no account of the material in Plutarch. With the version in Plutarch cp. the shorter (but earlier) accounts given by Polyaenus 8. 41 (ed. Woelflin, p, 318 f.), Nic. Damasc. Cp. oracle on the χωλή βασιλεία Nen. Hell. 3, 3, 3, and the myth of Oedipus. 4. καταστησάμενοι. The 1 nor. mid. here is something of a crux. The phrase 5. 92, 6 infra δυτινα Δυ τρόπου άσφαλέστατον καταστησάμενος των πρηγμάτων κάλλιστα την πόλιν έπιτροπεψοί is not exactly parallel. Kruger supplies την συμφορήν (die unglücklichen Verhaltnisse), Buchr and Stein however take the word of the κατάστασιε πόλισε as in 1. c., in which case it might be as well to insert τὰ πράγματα, οτ τὴν πόλιν here. The transitive force of I agr. mid. is shown 8, 105, (But there van H. reads κατεκτήσατο after Cobet.)

5. έκ Μαντινέης. This certainly have been strange, if Kyrene had been really made up of genuine Dorians: but neither the legislator nor his work is Dorian nor philo-Spartan : cp. Busolt, Lakedrimonier, i.

Cp. 5. 28. 6. καταρτιστήρα. Kyrenaeans apparently ask for a constitution, and are given a legislator.

The Kuphvalwv moderela is virtually lost (cp. V. Rose, Arist. Frag. ed. Teubner. p. 328), but perhaps it is to the work and policy of Demonax (περλ Κυρήνην οι τον δήμον καθιστάντες) that Aristotle refers Pol. 7. 4, 19, 1319b as similar in policy and utility to that of Kleisthenes at Athens, φυλαί τε γάρ έτεραι ποιητέαι πλείους και φρατρίαι, και τά των ίδιων lepar σινακτέον els ollya και καινά, και πάντα σοφιστέον όπως αν δτι μάλιστα αναμιχθώσι πάντες άλλήλοις al δέ συνήθειαι διαζευχθώσεν αl πρότερον.

ψ. τριφύλους. The number is the Dorian number, but the members are colluvial. μοῦρα below seems = φυλή. not a part of a peld. The first tribe is not Dorian, being composed of Theracans and their clients, whether brought from Thera (Niebuhr) or native Libyans (K. O. Müller). The Phylac are in fact geographical, though not localised.

10. περιοίκων. Did they cease to be dependent, and receive the franchise (Niebuhr) or remain villeins (Muller, Rawliuson)? It seems more natural to suppose that περίωκοι refers to local relations in Kyrene: in which case a full franchise can hardly have been accorded. On the other hand there is no sense in their being mentioned unless they had some political status. It is possible that this first tribe of Theraeans formed something of a Eupatrid class, and were in possession or were assigned possession of the soil, and that the text is only a clumsy and obscure way of saying that the first or Theraean tribe formed a landed aristocracy.

11. Πελοποννησίων και Κρητών. Neither is the second tribe Dorian,

6. Σάμον. Polykrates was at the time (c. 530 m.c.) tyrant of Samos. Blakesley obviously exaggerates in suggesting that this visit of Arkesilaos might have caused "the whole [sic] history of Cyrene to be brought to the common [sic] knowledge of the Samians" (n. 424): but there are some curious coincidences in the stories of the Samian and Kyrenaean tyrants; cp. cc. 161 supra, 164 infra. Evelthon need not have been stricken in years at this time even if his grandson Gorgos is on the throne thirty years afterwards, 5. 101 infra.

In his interests, by concert. Blakesley.

9. aξιοθέητον. Hdt. had presumably seen the said censer in the Corinthian treasury at Delphi, with the offerings of Gyges 1. 14, cp. Introduction, § 16, IV. Delphi owed the treasury properly speaking to Kypselos. On the overthrow of the tyrannis, the title no doubt was changed. Delphi rather than Samos appears throughout as the focus of these traditions (cp. c. 163), but the applications of Arkesilaos to Polykrates and of his mother to Evelthon suggest interesting problems of commercial and political intercourse between the states named (cp. c. 152 supra), and it is not likely that these matters were forgotten in Samos, or even in Zankle (c. 22 ff.).

to Evelthon might have been more suc-cessful if her son had not been intriguing at the same time in Samos. The omission of Egypt from their counsels, and of the previous negociations with Amasis, from Hdt.'s narrative are observable (vide c. 160 supra), specially in the light of c. 165 infra: had Amasis and Polykrates already broken?

Rawlinson's contention that dvadasuds need not mean a new re-division is supported by the use of avadacoutras in the oracle c. 159 supra. The land was to be taken, as in the former case, from the Libyans. This oracle is in part, assuming the authenticity of the text, a vaticinium post eventum. If such an oracle had been extant in 466 B.c. Pindar would hardly have written in that year: παισί τούτοις δηδοον θάλλει μέρος Αρκεσίλας, Pyth. 4. 115. Arkesilaos IV. must have been deposed about or before 460 n.c., see Appendix XII., Introduc-tion, § 17, and Hdt. cannot have acquired this material until some time after that event. The oracle has been reduced to prose again, but the hexametric terminations are easily detected : Kiphing Bagiλεύειν-ήσυχος είναι-άπόπεμπε κατ' οθρον — es την αμφιρριτον έλθης—ταυρος ο καλ-λιστεύων. Perhaps he sent them away from Kyrene without intending that they should arrive at Kypros. Anyway they were released at Knidos and despatched to Thera. Stein ascribes the action of the Knidians to their and despatched to Inera. Stein ascribes the action of the Knidians to their Dorian kinship with the Kyrencans,
Knidos being a colony from Lakedaimon
1. 174, like Thera, the metropolis of Kyrene: but is the kinship certain?
It was remote, if not fictitious: and even the recognition of a common metropolis would not have counted for much against diverse political interests. Opposition to the dynastic intrigues between the tyrants of Samos and Kyrene might help to explain the rescue.

15. γυναϊκα . . 'Αλάτωρ. The commentators make a difficulty out of Alazeir's daughter being a σιγγενή of her husband Arkesilaos, and Rawlinson infers from the name that Barka was under a native dynasty, and that Alazeir's daughter was related to Arkesilaes on the mother's side. This is unnecessary. Alazeir, or Aladdeir (cp. Bachr, ad l.), though a Libyan name, or title, may have designated an Hellenic, a Battiad prince; and there were certainly Battiadae in Barka, as we see from c. 202 infra. Reconciliation had been effected between the two branches of the Battiadae, if there had ever been pied by the transactions just narrated, ce. 162-164. At the date of Arkesilaos' exile (c. 162), Polykrates was alive, and Egypt probably still independent: at the time of Arkesilaos death, Egypt had been conquered by Kambyses, and Kambyses was perhaps already dead, having meanwhile received the submission of Arkesilaos, and of Kyrene. This 'medism' must have taken place during the interval covered by the narrative in c. 164, and this considera-tion shows us how artificial and incomplete the narrative is, and how much Hdt. is at the mercy of his pragmatic sources. As often happens, however, Hdt.'s text contains in itself a possible solution of the difficulty. Pheretime pleads in Egypt that her son has perished διὰ τὸν μηδισμέν. Holt. himself asserts that Arkesilaos III. surrendered Kyrene to Kambyses and paid tribute. Have we here then one of the true reasons of his death, and of the death of his father-in-law Alexeir in Barka, if not the true reason of his flight from Kyrene, ascribed in c. 164 to his superstition?—That Pheretime applies to Aryandes proves that Kambyses had already left Egypt: the expedition presently despatched by Aryandes, in answer to the prayer of Pheretime, is ex hypothesis synchronous with the Seythian expedition of Darcies (c. 145 supra).

was apparently a double one (1) coining, (2) disturbing the relations of the im-perial coinage by the extreme purity of his silver. Rawlinson argues that there would be no need of any other charge; but as Blakesley points out the posi-tion of Darcios was long insecure, and the story of Oroctes 3, 127 f. suggosts that roundabout methods were employed for suppressing formidable satraps. However the ally alrin was probably the true one, as the mere probably the true one, as the mere coinage of silver was probably not an offence, though the coinage of gold would have been high treason. (Cp. Gardner, Tupes, pp. 8, 26, B. Head, Historia, 699 f.) As usual Hdt. is complete master of the king's mind (cp. c. 1 supra), but the logic of the passage is not very close: the coinage might have been taken as a symptom of a rebellious intention. In Hdt.'s conception, perhaps, Dareios was jealous ception, perhaps, Dareies was jeuleus of the purity of the satrap's silver. No Aryundies have been as yet identified by the numismatists, B. Head, I.c.

2. κατοικτέρας. There was pro-bably as much of policy as of pity in it: nor is it likely that the mission of the Herald was confined to the bare question given below; anyway our author quickly enlarges the project of Aryandes into a wholesale conquest of Libya. In this consideration he finds an excuse for the excursus on the Libyans, their land and life, which follows (cc. 168-199). Cp. n.

3. vauracé. The employment of the fleet, if indeed there was a fleet, is noticeable: information as to its composition would have been interesting; the rather, as another fleet was exhypothesi serving against Scythia. The ships may have been manned by native Egyptians, cp. 7. 80, or the vessels may have been Phoenician, cp. 3. 17, 19. It is not inconceivable that some Greeks may have served; in any case the command is in the hands of a Persian, cp. 7. 97. Such divided and coequal commands were not calculated to ensure success, cp. the anecdote c. 203 infra, and the case of the Naxian expedition, 5. 32, 33. Were there other Persians in the force beside the commanders? Cp. 200 infra. Both commanders are Persians, though one has an Egyptian name, which is remarkable, and even suspicious. On Maraphii and Pasargadae, cp. 1. 125. Polyaenus, 7. 23, reports a siege of Barke by a Persian Arsumes, who may be the Amasis of this passage, but the circumstances are different (see Appendix XII.).

168. 1. οἰκθουσι δὲ κτλ. There follows here an excursus (cc. 163-199) on the thnography and geography of Libya. It falls obviously into three main parts, the first (cc. 168-180), on the coast-tribes between Egypt and "Lake Tritonis": the second (cc. 181-190), on the parallel belt of Oases inland: the third (cc. 191-196) on Western Libya. The remaining passages of the excursus (cc. 197, 198, 199) contain some general remarks, and bring the historian back to Kyrene. What relation this excursus, which is apparently from a source or sources other than the preceding and succeeding history of Kyrene, bears to other parts of Hdt.'s work, and whether all portions of the excursus were composed and inserted at the same time, are questions which must be raised, even if no definite answers are forthcoming, cp. Appendix XII. Blakesley has suggested that Hdt.'s information is based on "merchants' stories," and further discriminates between the information gained by consting traders (cc. 168-180) and the information based on excursus (cc. 181 ff.). This suggestion obviously corresponds to the character of the material. It does not follow that Hdt. collected information or compiled results from these different sources at one time or in one place, nor that this ethnographic excursus was part of his original draft of the Persian dealings with Kyrene. It appears on internal evidence to have been written (or revised) not merely after his visit to Egypt (cc. 168, 180, 181, 186), but also after his settlement in Thurii (cp. c. 196 infra). If the passage (cc. 168-180) might have been composed from information collected in Egypt (cp. 2, 32, 33), the last portion of the excursus (cc. 191-196, or 190) has the appearance of being derived from western (Italiet, Sikeliet) sources. passage on the Oases (cc. 181-185), starting as it does from Egypt, may be thought to be due to an Egyptian (Gracco-Eg.) source: but the great geographical blunder by which the parallel of Thebes is substituted for that of Memphis, the excessive symmetry in the cases and zones, and the zone-theory itself point to western ideas. (Cp. Appendix XII.) It must also be remembered that Hdt. was not the first author who described

1. ἀπ' Αιγύπτου (cp. c. 17 supra ἀπὸ τοῦ Βορυσθενειτέων κτλ.). ἀρξάμενοι is here de trop. The Adyrmachidae are mentioned by Skylax, Strabo and others, and placed by them in substantially the same position as by Hdt. As Hdt. however does not mention the Marmaridae, the chief tribe in these parts according to Skylax, Strabo, and Ptolemy, Rawlinson would identify them with the Giligammae. See next c.

2. τὰ πλίω Αίγυπτίοισι. 2. τὰ πλέω Αἰγυπτόιου. Skylax places the Adyrmachidae within the Egyptian frontier (Geogr. min. i. p. 81), making Libya begin from the Kanobie mouth of the Nile: even so, we may suspect that the Egyptian influence is overstated, if the habits described were really still in force.

3. ἐσθῆτα. In 7. 71, Hdt. mentions that the Libyans were skins: V. de Saint-Martin, Le Nord de l'Afrique, p. 42 n. cites Pomp. Mela, I. 8, primores sagis velantur, vulgus bestiarum pecusagis velantur, vulgus bestiarum pecu-dumque pellibus.

5. κομῶσα. Hair dressing had some national and political significance even for Hellenes. Cp. Becker and Goll, Charikles, xi. iii. (vol. iii. pp. 297 ff.), and cc. 175, 178, 180, 191 intra. 6. ἀντιδάκνει., ῥίπτι. 'Bites them before throwing them away.' On licethat the custom still obtains among lerbers south of Atlas, op. c. p. 48. Cp. also Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, pp. 72 ff., p. 539.

11. Havvós. There is some doubt about the identity of this place. Skylax (op. c. p. 82, § 108), places it two days' sail west of Apis, which with him marks the western limit of Egypt and of the Adyrmachidae. Rawlinson admits the identification with the Panormos of Ptolemy = Port Bardeah. (Ptol. 4. 5, 4). R. Neumann (Nordafrika nach Herodot. 1892) remarks that the great Katabathmos (Akabet el Kabira) would form a natural frontier and support Hdt. against Skylax, but is also prepared to allow that each may have been right in his own time. (Hdt. dees not in general allow for any changes between his own time and the time of the story, cp. Introduction, p. lv.)

The name is not found accent as anyearently quoted from Matter. (Saint-Martin). The name is not found except as apparently quoted from Hdt. The locality corresponds to the Marmarica of Ptolemy, occupied by several small tribes. The Periplus of Skylax places the Marmaridae next the Adyrmachidae and extends them to Hesperides. Rawlinson identifies the Gilliampae with the Marmaridae. the Giligamae with the Marmaridae:

τὸ πρὸς ἐσπέρην [χώρην] μέχρι 'Αφροδισιάδος νήσου. ἐν δὲ τῷ μεταξύ τούτου [χώρω] ή τε Πλατέα νήσος επικέεται, την εκτισαν οί Κυρηναίοι, και έν τή ήπείρω Μενέλαος λιμήν έστι και "Αζιρις, 5 την οι Κυρηναίοι οίκεον, και το σίλφιον άρχεται άπο τούτου παρήκει δε άπο Πλατέης νήσου μέχρι του στόματος της Σύρτιος νόμοισι δε χρέωνται ούτοι παραπλησίοισι τοῖσι 170 έτέροισι. Saint-Martin suggests that in the word Marmaridae we have the name of the Berbers. R. Neumann suggests that Adyrmachidae and Giligammae (sic) are subdivisions of Marmaridae (op. c. p. 13) - a remark favoured by the state-

2. ἐν τῷ μεταξύ. Between Plynos and Aphrodisias. χώρην bis seel. Stein.

The island Aphrodisias is identified by Rawlinson with Leia, a small island by Rawlinson with Leia, a small island due north of Kyrene, off Apollonia. To the east lie Aziris, Platea, Portus Menelaos. According to Skylax, Menelaos is two days' sail west of Plynos: from Menelaos to Platea (Il\(\text{Rax}\tilde{e}a\)) upwards of two days. Whether Hdt. correctly conceives the order of the places named is not apparent, owing to his mentioning first the islands, and then the places on the mainland. Menelaos, Platea, Aziris, Aphrodisias represents the order from E. to W. On Aziris ep. c. 157 supra. from E. to W. On Aziris ep. c. 157 supra. The name Menelaos suggests a tradition which would carry the acquaintance of the Hellenes with Libya back into Heroic times. Cp. 2. 118, Od. 4.

5. τὸ σίλφιον. Too well-known in the historian's time to require description, hence the article; as we might say 'the potato,' 'the tobaccoplant.' The wealth of Kyrene and the Battiads was largely due to the export of this simple, valuable as a drug and as a condiment. Op. the proverb τὸ Bárrou σίλφιον Aristoph. Plutus 925, and Schol. ad I. It appears on the coins of Kyrene and Barka (vid. Gardner, coins of Kyrene and Barka (vol. Gardner, Types, P. iii. 27, ix. 29, 30). In Pliny's time it was extinct at Cyrene though still found elsewhere (Nat. H. 22, 48). Strabo mentions its malicious destruction by the nomads 837. It is believed to exist now in the Cyrenaica as drias, in a degenerate form. See further notes ad l. in Bachr and Rawlinson, R. Neumann, op. c. pp. 146-151. The name was probably Libyan (sliph), op. Studniezka, Kyrene, pp. 7, 12. 6. τοῦ στόματος τ. Σ. What can ' the mouth of the Syrtis' mean? Rawlinson (ad 1.) recognises that Hdt. knows of but one Syrtis, the Greater; the expression here used generates an idea that Hdt. thought vaguely of the Syrtis as a river. The phraseology here and in c. 173 infra, lends colour to the suggestion. The gender of Zépres (†) is against such a notion, but might be paralleled by h the writer's point of view, as that of Greeks, it might be in Kyrene, or in Europe. The form 'Ασβύσται is supported by Kallimachos' (of Kyrene) Hymn to Apollo, 766 'Ασβυστίς γαία, and by Steph. Byz. Saint-Martin suggests that the tribe survives in the Gezbida, a division of the Tibou, in the desert east of Fezzan, to which they were presumably driven by the Arab conquerors. In the historian's time the Asbystae appear as the tribe most affected by the Hellenic colony: they perhaps supplied the Pericikoi mentioned ce. 159, 161 supra.

4. τεθριπποβάται. Helt. does not say here that they learnt the practice from the Greeks, and in c. 189 infra he makes exactly the opposite statement:

V. de Saint-Martin compares the Outchtata, a berber tribe located on the Syrtes by the Arabian historian Ibn Khaldoun.

3. Βάκαλες. There is a respectable variant Κοβαλες (which Holder adopts): Rawlinson identifies them with the Cabyles of Algeria: Ptolemy 4. 7, 35 has a district Βακαλίτις in Acthiepia.

Cabyles of Algeria: Ptolemy 4. 7, 35 has a district Baranter in Aethiepia.

5. χρέωνται. Subject is Λόσχίσαι.

172. 2. Nασαμῶνες. The Nasamones were evidently one of the most important and best known of the Libyan tribes, and the ancient geographers agree generally in the position assigned to them. (See Rawlinson ad l.) The Romans, however, appear to have wished to push them inland, or at least to chastise them for their 'wrecking' practices. (Vastae Nasamon populator Syrtis, Sil. Italic. 1. 408. Cp. Lucan 9. 432 ft.) Josephus and Eusebius record Roman expeditions against them (Bell. Jud. 2. 16, Chram. p. 378, ed. Maio). Saint-Martin (to whom the above references are due) argues from Ptolemy 4. 5, 21, 30 that in Ptolemy's time the Nasamones were diminished and confined to the interior. They are mentioned (he adds) in the middle of the 6th century in the Jehannis of Corippus as rising against the dominion of Canstantinople with numerous other Libyan tribes under native chiefs. A little later they pass under the Arabdeminion, and Saint-Martin finds them again in the Nefadwa of the writers, especially Ibn Khaldoun (end of 14th century), a name comprising a number of berber tribes south and west of the

3. Αθγιλα, one of the best ascertained spots in the Herodotean geography of Libya, the name and place remaining unchanged to the present day. Hornemann was the first European who visited the Audjelah, in 1798, apparently without describing it in detail; Pacho visited it in 1825 and guarantees the fidelity of Hdt.'s description; Hamilton (Wanderings in North Africa, 1856, c. xiv.) describes Angila (sic) and thinks that the name formerly included a group of cases, the most important of which is Jalo, 28 miles or eight hours E.S.E. from Augila (op. c. p. 191). Cp. Pliny, Nat. H. 29. 29 locustarum minimae sine pennis quos attelabos vocant. Locusts are specified as lawful food for Muhammadans. (Hughes' Notes) on Muhammadanis, p. 144.) Arrian, Indica, 29, describes a preparation of dried fish similar to that here described (cit. apud Bachr). ἐπὶ seems superfluous, and inelegant (ἐπειτα ἐπὶ ἐπιπάσσοντες). If it is retained with β (Holder) against a it is of course to be understood in tmesi. The marriage customs are probably not quite accurately described by Herodotus: in fact the passage which follows is not free from confusion. Polygamy and Promiscuity are hardly reconcilable, and the ceremony, panalleled from the practice of the Massagetae (1. 216), suggests rather polyandry than polygyny. The marriage custom further specified (πρῶτον μίν κτλ.) also resembles a polyandrous custom. Strabo 783 (apud

Baehr) mentions a similar practice among the Arabians. Cp. Robertson Smith, Kinship and Marriage in Early Arabia, p. 133. The three particulars mentioned by Hdt. reduce themselves to a misconception of a community of wives, or of a wife, among a (small) number of kinsmen, instances of which are common. It is possible, however, to combine practices of polyandry and polygyny:

"a Nair may be in one of several combinations of husbanda": see further, H. Spencer, Principles of Sociology (vol. i. pt. iii. ce. iii. viii.) and Westermarck, op. cit. ce. iv. v. and esp. p. 72.

Their eaths and mantic seem to point to Ancestor worship, or its rudiments, and to belong to a higher stratum of custom than the marriage institutions just described. According to Pliny (7. 2) it was the Nasatnones (not the Notes) which nearly exterminated the Psylli. Rawlinson rationalises the story by combining the wind and the Nasamones. The Psylli are placed east of the Nasamones by Strabo, 838. Maps erroneously place them to the west, as though error here merely meant south, or

4. λίγω κτλ. This phrase is no guarantee that Hdt. had not read the guarantee that Hdt. had not read the story in the Periodos of Hekataios, much less that he had conversed with 'Libyans' on the subject; or with other Greeks, who cited Libyans as their authority. But even 'Libyans' Hdt. might have met in Egypt, or in Sieily, or the west. Cp. 7. 165. The specification of the source here invalidates the testimony. Cp. c. 187 infra. Introduction, § 22.

174. 2. Papáparres. These Garamantes are a truly pacific folk, who though dwelling & τφ θρεωδεί do not know how to defend themselves except by flight.

Unfortunately a tribe of Garamantes appears in c. 183 infra with very different qualities: are they the same, is the reading correct? Eustathios and Steph. B. both read Garamantes here. Larcher supposes two tribes of the same name but different habits! Pliny and Mela ascribe the pacitic peculiarities here predicated of the Garamantes to a here predicated of the Garamantes to a tribe of Gamphasantes. R. Neumann would boldly read Gamphasantes here (op. cit. pp. 21 ff.). Blakesley con-jectures that Hdt. draws from two different sources, and his authority here mistook the Troglodyte Tibboos, who in c. 183 are said to be hunted by the Garamantes, for the hunters. Saint-Martin suggests that the Gammantes here referred to are to be sought in the Wady Gadama three or four days south of Tripoli. Even if we could make Gadamantes out of this, we should not save the credit of Hdt.'s description of the people, which appears to fit only the Troglodytes c, 183 infra. See note ad i.c. The conclusion to which we are driven is that Hdt. could make or leave contradictory or inconsequent statements in his text, almost in juxtaposition, without becoming conscious of the trouble he was providing for his friends. No one has ventured to reconcile Hdt.'s statements about the Garamantes by the supposition of a wholesale degeneration, such as the Lydians underwent (1. 79, 155 f.), or by the hypothesis that they are described in this passage from the Greek point of view and in c. 183 from the Troglodyte point of view : such subtleties are less probable than the simple conclusion that Hdt. sometimes blundered, or slumbered.

3. λόφους κείρονται. A sort of telic predication: 'so as to produce crests.'

6. Kivvy. The extraordinary fertility of the Kinyps is celebrated c. 198 infra, cp. 5. 42. There is however some difficulty in identifying the river or the Hill of the Graces with any modern features. The Gharian range of mountains is only four or five miles from the sea: the only stream answering to the Kinyps is the Wady Mghr-Ghrin, an insignificant brook. Has the face of nature changed, or was Hdt. illinformed ! The simplest solution is the hypothesis that Hdt. was mistaken, or misinformed, as to the length of the stream. Cp. R. Neumann, op. c. p. 25.

176. 2. Γίνδανες. With the practice of the Gindan's may be compared certain customs in Thibet as described by Marco Polo, Bk. 2, c. 45 (vol. ii. p. 35, and note 4. Yule, ed.2).

3. ús hiyeras. Hdt. appears to have doubts in regard to his information. Cp. c. 173 supra. Introduction, § 22. It is obvious that the wearing of leathern anklets, or bracelets, may be a fact, though the reason given may be a fiction. Anyway metal would presumably have been worn, if the wearers could have afforded it. Cp. c. 168 supra. The Gindanes must have been a poor folk: or was it only the poor among them who were leather rings?

177. 2. Λωτοφάγοι. Lotophagi is obviously only a Greek epithet as old as Homer (Od. 9. 84) derived from the staple food of the tribe; the native name is generally supposed to be lost. Pliny, indeed, gives allachroae as the name of the lotos-caters (Hist., nat. 5. 4), and this has been identified with the name of the next tribe mentioned by Hdt., the Machlyes or Machryes (V. de Saint-Martin, op. c. p. 54), who also eat the lotes. May we not infer that Hdt. or his authority here has duplicated the lotes eating Machlyes? Rawlinson, however, seems to identify the Lotophagi with the Gindanes, about whose identity with the Gindanes, about whose identity there is some doubt. In any case an epithet has been raised into a separate tribal appellative, ep. cc. 100, 107 supra. The country of the Lotophagi is to be recognised in the promoutory of Zarzis near the lesser Syrtis (Rawlinsen). Neumann's objections, op. cit. p. 26, do not touch the topographical identification, but only the supposition that the Lotos-land is to be restricted to the premiusula, of which paither Rawlinson. peninsula, of which neither Rawlinson nor even Hdt. is guilty. In 2. 96 the Kyrenaean lotos is described as resembling a thorn-tree: in 2. 92 the Egyptian lotes is described as an ealible water-lily. Rawlinson's note enumerates six different plants to which the name was applied: the lotes here referred to he applied: the lotos here referred to he identifies with the Elearnus Zixuphus, which "looks and tastes rather like a bad crab-apple." Hdt says it is sweet as a date. Perhaps it has degenerated even as the silphium. The passage on the lotos in Rennell, Geogr. Syst. of Hdt, ii. pp. 288-290, is worth consulting. describes a paste and a wine, made from the lotes, a description based perhaps in part on the authority of Polybies, direct, or through Cornelius Nepos. Cp. Athenaeus, 651 (= Polyb, xii. ii. ed. 178. 2. Máxhves. Saint-Martin identities the Machlyes with "the large and important Berber tribe of Maghila" important Berber tribe of Maghila" represented in the history of the Arab conquest on the west side of the great Syrtis (op. cit. p. 54). Rennell (op. cit. ii.² p. 286) ingeniously suggests that the Machlyes are less Lotos because they were the folk so clever at eatching fish as described by Strabo, 835.

3. κατήκουσι δλ κτλ. The geographical details of this c. give rise to considerable difficulties: the first, as to the identification of "Lake Tritonis." This difficulty is obviated by the supposition that the so-called Lake includes (a) the lesser Syrtis, unknown or un-

(a) the lesser Syrtis, unknown or unnamed by Hdt. and (b) an inland lake in the neighbourhood, which once communicated with the Syrtis. The name of this lake is given as Shibk-el-Lowdeath (Rawl.), Sibkha-Laoudiah (Saint-Martin), ol. Chot el-Kebir. A parallel case, of an inland sea called Μμνη, we have in the Μμνη Μαιήτις. An alternative supposition must be reckoned with, viz. that this passage in the geography of Hdt. is still in the speculative and imaginary stage, and that there is a lake in Libya because a lake is wanted for the procession in c. 180. The second difficulty is more serious, yet more easily disposed of. There is no 'great' stream or river in these parts to-day: there are only rivulets losing themselves in the sands of the lake. Rawlinson in the sands of the lake, Rawlinson endorses Rennell on the subject. (Cp. Rennell, ii.² pp. 335 f.) The river again may be a mythical river, or it may be wanted to divide the Machiyes and Ausees. A third difficulty a reveated by the executor feland. The island of Phles. the oracular island. The island of Phla, if it ever existed, is now part of the sandy tract between the lagoons and the sea. R. Neumann, op. c. pp. 28-59, discusses the above problems at length, and though he considers that the data in Hdt. (and Skylax) are too precise and full (cingchent) to be mere invention, he proves that the Triton Lake and River cannot be satisfactorily identified with the actual features, that they are bequests of the strictly mythological period, and that the later and better-informed geo-graphers move the Lake on to the Atlantic (Dioderos) or back to Kyrene (Strabo), though l'tolemy, most precise and misleading of all, gives latitude and longitude for Lake and River, very much where Hdt. seems to place them.

6. φασι, who! Delphic authorities?
Or men of Thera, or of Kyrene, who were concerned to push their interests under Lakedaemonian auspices? Or Sikeliots, who might be dreaming of attacking Carthage on its native soil? In any case the tradition of such an oracle carries us back to the days of Lakedaemonian expansion (ep. 1, 69, 70, 3, 47), before the Spartans were open to the taunts current in Hdt.'s own day, 8. 132 infra, for it is hardly explicable as ктюаь is mistranslated by Rawl. "were to have colonised." The nor. "were to have colonised." The nor, inf. κτίσαι represents the direction of the oracle in the imparative (ep. Goodwin, Monts and Tenses, § 28, note 2). Tr. 'They say the Lacedaemonians were bidden by an oracle colonise this island,' or, 'an oracle, they say, but the Lacedaemonians colonise this island.'

179. 1. 'τστι δὲ καὶ δδε λόγος λεγόμενος. Rawlinson who begins with a mistranslation ("The following is the story as it is commonly told") is content to show, following Grote, from the variety to show, following Grote, from the variety of the modes of bringing Jason to Lake Tritonis, "the unreal and poetic character of the entire narrative." This however does not suggest the significance, the moral, of the poem. Blakesley, n. 463, sees that the mythical story was used to justify actual policy; but he stops short of suggesting that the myth was invented to justify the occupation of Libya. The story of Jason's visit to Libya is told by Pindar, Pyth. 4, as of course afterwards by Apollon. Rhod. Cp. infra. In Pindar's version of the myth there are two important variants from the version in Hdt. (1) the visit is paid on the way home, whereas in Hdt. the visit is involuntary, paid on the outward voyage, or rather on a voyage to Delphi. (2) In Pindar Triton gives the Argonaut Euphemos (ancestor of Battos) a clod of Libyan earth, while in Hdt.'s version Triton receives from Jason a tripod, and promptly puts it to its Delphic use, divines on it, and foretells to Jason and his crew the whole story, i.e. truth (τὸν πάντα λόγον). Had the exaggerated hopes of Hellenic colonisation in Libya ever been more nearly realised doubtless ever been more nearly realised doubtless the old tripod of Jason's would have the old tripod of Jason's would have been fortheeming. An unfulfilled prophecy is specially precious to the student as showing that all oracles are not to be dismissed as vaticinia post eventum. Where Hdt. got this story it is not easy to say; Rawlinson indeed remarks, "Hdt. is here only reporting the story as it was told by some poet": but the bourne of Jason's voyage suggests a Delphic source. In Diodor. (4. 66) Triton is enhemerised into a king of the country. The symbolical clod of earth reappears in one of the foundation legends appears in one of the foundation legends of Thera: according to which Euphemos, after receiving the clod from Triton, threw it into the sea where it became

180. 1. Avotes. The Ausces are also untraceable. Rawlinson suggests a possible identity with the Austrians of Synesius: Saint-Martin finels them again in the Johannis of Corippus 2. 55

Autileten patriis non melitor Ausis (patris non melitor ausis, Bekker).

4. oprii & levaurii. There follows a description of the annual festival with which Athene Tritonis is worshipped by the Ausean maidens, consisting of (1) a propossion (2) a worse between between between languages. (1) a procession, (2) a worry between two companies. The words τω αθθεγενέι θεω λέγονσα τ. π. d. stand here as if to confute K. O. Muller's idea that we have in the passage merely a Libyan reproduction of the worship of the "Bocotian" Athene, introduced into Libya by the Minyan colonists. Is it not more probable that the deity and ritual were of native and local origin, and that, if the details are correctly given by Hdt., there was some religious syncretism after contact with the Greeks! There was, perhaps, in Hdt.'s time a theory current that the Libyan cult was of Hellenic origin, supported no doubt by the evidence of the 'Corinthian helm' and 'Hellenie panoply,' with which the belle, chosen to personate the goddess (cp. story of Phya, 1. 60), was equipped. This theory Hdt. apparently sets himself to combat. If the cult was native and primitive, the question arose, what arms were employed before the advent of the Hellenes ! To soive this difficulty Hdt, expressly offers a conjecture of his own: the damsel was equipped in Egyptian armour. For this belief he gives a very unfortunate reason, viz. his own theory that the Greek down and speror were introduced from Egypt. The evidence of the monuments is against this theory (Rawlinson and Stein ad L.), and the inconsistent with the story of the Bronzemen which Hdt. himself tells 2. 152. It may be observed that Hdt. uses the two terms xerin (galea) and *pairos (cussis) as equivalent: had he used them with a consciousness of their originally distinct meanings, he might have hit upon a theory that would have squared with the theory c. 180 infra that the snakes of the aigis were originally bathern though. Why Hdt. supposes that the Libyan goddess had Egyptian armour before she had Grecian is not clear: not, surely, by such a syllogism: Greek armour originally came from Egypt, this is Greek armour, ergo, it was originally Egyptian! More probably he supposes that Egyptian influences once extended as far as Lake Tritonis; for he nowhere betrays any knowledge of the Libyan regime in Egypt. (Cp. Appendix XII.) Anyway, if a native war-goddess was worshipped by the Ausees she was no doubt armed with native weapons. But on the shore of the lesser Syrtis we are already within the limits of the Carthaginian influence, and it may be conjectured that in this daughter of Posseldon and Tritonis we have a Liby-Phoenician deity not to be distinguished from Astarte. (This appears to be Bachr's view too: cp. his German translation, note ad l.:) or at least that there was a syncretism between a Punic and Libyan cult, before the Greek influence, if ever, was added. If a Corinthian helmet was used on the lesser Syrtis the probability is that it was imported via Syracuse.

12. κύκλω. How the procession could go round a lake, which, according to his own showing, is an arm of the sea and has a large river flowing into it, Hdt. omits to explain. The account of the ritual may have come from one source,

19. μιξινδέ. On the supposed customs ep. note e. 172 sepra. Aristotle may have had this passage in mind when he criticised Plato's Communism, Pol. 2. 3, 9, 12624.

γένηται, συμφοιτώσι ές τώυτο οι άνδρες τρίτου μηνός, και τώ αν οίκη τών ανδρών το παιδίον, τούτου παις νομίζεται.

181. 2. ή θηριώδης Λιβύη. The shy and peaceable Garamantes have been deserited as dwelling in the θηρεώδης Λεβόη, c. 174 supra. There are according to Hdt. (or the authorities followed by him) three or rather four belts in Libya: η παραθαλασσία (λιβίση), ή θηρωόδης, όφριη ψάμμης extending all across the continent, and finally ή ξημος. The most northern or seacoast belt is divided, by the fiver Triton, into an eastern section inhabited by Nomads, and a western, inhabited by Husbandmen, c. 191 infra. In the present chapter Hdt. (having described the population of the Nomial section of the northern belt, cc. 168-180, and of the second belt so far as inhabited c. 174) proceeds to describe the chain of Oases in the sandy ridge, from Thele's to the Pillars of Herakles: oddly enough he does not use the term Oasis, except once as a proper name, 3. 26. Almost every feature in this geographical scheme is an exaggeration or a defect. Rawlinson, indeed, defends Hdt. from Niebuhr's criticism, and asserts that there are in fact three (sic) tracts which stretch across the continent from Egypt to the Atlantic ocean, first the coast tract, comparatively fertile; next, the hill-region (sic), "which especially in its more western (sie) parts is greatly infested with wild beasts"; thirdly, the Great Sahara. But Rawl. admits that these distinctions are to a agreat extent fanciful, and the mest to be said for Hdt. is that his artificial scheme had some relation to natural facts. For a description of the Libyan desert, or eastern portion, see Keith Johnston's Africa (Stanford) pp. 104-107, from which it will be seen that the apologetics of Heeren and Rawlinson go too far. As a matter of fact the zonetheory suits western Libya (esp. Algeria) better than the region from Egypt to Carthage: and might have been thence derived. Rawlinson appears also to go too far (with Heeren) in ex-tolling the virtues of Hdt.'s description of the caravan route, and in defending

Hdt, on the ground that he only says the stations are separated by "about" (μάλιστα) ten days' journey each from the next. Rawlinson overlooks the fact that in the details Hdt. separates the stations in the details little separates the stations by exactly ten days. Cp. infea.

3. ἀπό Θηβέων τῶν Αίγυπτιῶν tử Ἡρακλέας στήλας. The terminus at que and the terminus at quent here mentioned are both puzzling. Not Thebes but Memphis should be the point of departure (cp. note below), and the l'illars of Herakles suggest a voyage rather than a desert journey. The passage looks as though it were based on the information gathered by Hanno: who touched the desert a day's voyage short of Kerne, Periplus S (tient. Men. i. p. 6), cp. c. 195 infra. Ind Hdt. conceive the line here indicated as a diagonal? Or had he no very clear conception in the matter at all, and did he use the 'Pillars' simply to suggest the far west! The phraseology in c. 185 infra seems to show that by the Pillars he means the meridian of the Pillars he means the meridian of the Pillars he neans the meridian of the Pillars he neans the meridian of the Pillars he a combination, or inference, based upon several particulars, starting from the sandy desert bordering on Egypt, perhaps connected with the 'hill-region,' mentioned by Rawlinson as corresponding to Hdt.'s θημώδης, but all exaggerated and systematised, like other features in Hdt.'s Libya. As a matter of fact the cases of Siweh and Aujila are not on a sandbank but each in a hollow. Cp. K. Johnston's Africa, p. 106.

4. μάλιστα. Rawlinson emphasises this word, as though Helt, did not intend to make the intervals exactly ten days, overlooking the fact that the historian separates the particular places named infra by exactly ten days journey each from the next. Should not the μάλιστα here then be taken with the preceding words èν δὲ τῆ ἀφρώη ταύτη?

διὰ δέκα ἡμερέων όδοῦ ἀλός ἐστι τρύφεα κατὰ χόνδρους μεγάλους 5 ἐν κολωνοῖσι, καὶ ἐν κορυφῆσι ἑκάστου τοῦ κολωνοῦ ἀνακοντίζει ἐκ μέσου τοῦ ἀλὸς ὕδωρ ψυχρὸν καὶ γλυκύ, περὶ δὲ αὐτὸν ἄνθρωποι οἰκέουσι ἔσχατοι πρὸς τῆς ἐρήμου καὶ ὑπὲρ τῆς θηριώδεος, πρῶτοι μὲν ἀπὸ Θηβέων διὰ δέκα ἡμερέων όδοῦ ᾿Αμμώνιοι, ἔχοντες τὸ ἱρὸν ἀπὸ τοῦ Θηβαιέος Διός καὶ γὰρ [τὸ] ἐν Θήβησι, ώς καὶ το πρότερον εἴρηταί μοι, κριοπρόσωπον τοῦ Διὸς τὤγαλμά ἐστι. τυγχάνει δὲ καὶ ἄλλο σφι ὕδωρ κρηναῖον ἐόν, τὸ τὸν μὲν ὅρθρον γίνεται χλιαρόν, ἀγορῆς δὲ πληθυούσης ψυχρότερον, μεσαμβρίη τέ ἐστι καὶ τὸ κάρτα γίνεται ψυχρόν τηνικαῦτα δὲ ἄρδουσι τοὺς κήπους ἀποκλινομένης δὲ τῆς ἡμέρης ὑπίεται τοῦ ψυχροῦ, ἐς οῦ 15 δύεταί τε ὁ ῆλιος καὶ τὸ ὕδωρ γίνεται χλιαρόν ἐπὶ δὲ μᾶλλον ἰὸν ἐς τὸ θερμὸν ἐς μέσας νύκτας πελάζει, τηνικαῦτα δὲ ζέει ἀμβολάδην ταρέρχονταί τε μέσαι νύκτες καὶ ψύχεται μέχρι ἐς ἡῶ. ἐπίκλησιν δὲ αῦτη ἡ κρήνη καλέεται ἡλίου.

'On this sandbank roughly speaking, at intervals of ten days' journey.'
5. ἀλός. Salt is found in patches,

5. axis. Salt is found in patches, sometimes in extended tracts, in North Africa, and springs occasionally rise in their midst, but as Rawlinson admits "the general character of these salt-tracts is rather of plains than of hills." We have in fact here apparently again a confusion and an exaggeration, the cases are identified with salt patches, and the salt patches are endowed with springs, and the springs are clevated on conspicuous hills at intervals of ten days' journey. R. Neumann, who remarks that Hdt. can never have set eyes on an oasis, suggests that Hdt. placed the springs on hill-tops for two reasons: (1) that situation is common in Greece, (2) the sand had to be kept out of the springs (Nordelprice, p. 86 f.).

that situation is common in Greece, (2) the sand had to be kept out of the springs (Nordafrica, p. 86 f.).

8. πρῶτοι μἐν ἀπὸ Θηβέων διὰ δέκα ἡμερέων ὁδοῦ ᾿Αμμῶνιοι. The Ammonium is identified with the easis of Siweh. Siweh is at least twenty days journey from Thebes. The ordinary caravan route is from Memphis, which is in the same latitude as Siweh, and twelve days' journey. Helt,'s description is thus apparently in double error. Thebes was not the natural point of departure, and was at least twice as far off as he states. Saint-Martin has a far-fetched explanation of Helt,'s error. He observes that the great easis is seven days from Thebes, and that three days beyond the great easis is the easis of Dakhel. He argues that there was a sanctuary of Ammon at Dakhel. He supposes that it was against Pakhel, and not against Siweh that Kambyses directed an expedition from Thebes, 3. 26. He infers that Hdt. has confused the Ammonium of Dakhel, which is twenty days for the Itinerary of Hdt. and leaves Thebes as the starting point. But it is easier to believe that Hdt. was in error in making Thebes the point of departure. He might more naturally have done so as the god Ammon was from Thebes. R. Neumann (ap. c. p. 90) explains the error in Hdt. by the hypothesis that he had enquired of the priests in Thebes (sic) the distance of the casis of Ammon (meaning Siweh), and that they gave him the distance to the temple of Ammon at Daehel (sic).

This, however, will hardly account for the ζεει ἀμβολάδην, which Wilkinson apud Rawl. explains as a mistaken inference from the numerous bubbles which rise in these sulphureous ponds. The bubbles would presumably rise at all times: it seems unlikely that the

In marking the subdivisions of the day (or night) Herodotus does not avail himself for narrative purposes of the twelve subdivisions which, he tells us, 2. 109, the Greeks borrowed from the Babylonians (ωρη, 8. 14, 9. 52, points of time). He employs a more postical terminology (sometimes even thrillingly graphic, e.g. περλ λύχνων άρλη 7. 215) taken over from the daily life of the people. There are seven divisions of the day and night (4+3) here employed. With τὸν ὅρθρον ομ. άρλη δε ὁρθρον 7. 188, τὸ ὅρθρον ομ. άρλη δε ὁρθρον 7. 188, τὸ ὅρθρον 2. 173 (ἡλίον ἀνατείλαντος 7. 223, ἐξ ἡοῦς 7. 167); with ἀγορῆς πληθεούσης (υ.Ι. πληθώρης) ἀγορῆς 2. 173, πληθούσης (v.l. πληθώρης) άγορης 2. 173, άγορης πληθώρην 7. 223 (πρωί της ημέρης 9. 101); with αποκλινομένης της ημέρης 9. 101); with αποκλυομένης τη ημερης το αποκλυαμένης της μεσαμήλης 3. 104 (δείλη 9. 101, δείλη πρωίη 8. 6, δήτη 8. 9, 167); with δύεται ό ήλιος τρ. δύντος ήλίου 7. 149, μεσαμήρη 3. 104, τ. 113 supra, ήώς 7. 217.

Hamilton describes Jalo, 28 miles or eight hours E.S.E. from Aujila, as by far the most important in this group of oases. The distance between Siweh and Aujila is stated by K. Johnston as twelve days' journey; Hornemann accomplished it in uine days, thick preserves the days is given by at high pressure: ten days is given by Rawlinson, Saint-Martin and others as the usual local computation.

183. 4. Tapapavres. On the tribe, see below. The station described in this chapter is generally identified with the modern district Fezzan (see Rawlinson), but the ten days' journey is again a crux, or rather a manifest error. "It takes sixteen days at the least to cross the desert between Augila, which is at the edge of the Oasis, and Temisso, the first village in Fezzan" (Rewlinson). The supposition that Hdt. has simply omitted a station, and that the distance Garamantes should be estimated at twenty days, two stages of ten days each, seems to ascribe too high a value to the decimal computation upon which Hdt.'s itinerary is based.

Mdt.'s itmerary is based.

12. οί Γαράμαντες δή οὐτοι resuming from l'apauarres supra ad init. cup. need not be referred back to c. 174. It appears in fact from a comparison of the two passages that the Garamantes of c. 174 are the Troglodyte Aethiopians of e. 183. The Garamantes of the passage before us may be identified with the population of Fezzan, the ancient capital of which was Garama (Djerma). The 'Aethiopians' here referred to are to be no less certainly found in the Tibbus, still the victims of man-hunting raids, the slave-trade being the principal source of wealth in Fezzan. (K. Johnston, Africa, p. 100, Saint-Martin, op. c. p. 50.) The four-horsed chariots are out of fashion. 'Troglodytes' or cavedwellers here may suggest the Tibbus Reshade, 'Tibbus of the Rocks' (Tiboù Réchadèh, Saint-Martin), who however have been described by Nachtigal as rapacious, treacherous, and cruel, a character due perhaps to six centuries of suffering in the slave raids. The Tibbus are still described as fleet of foot, and their language compared to the whistling of birds: cp. references in Rawlinson and Saint-Martin. . 184. 3. 'Arápavres is an emendation by Salmasius from Rhianus, apud Steph. Byz., the MSS. all reading Ατλαντες. The name in any case looks suspiciously like a duplicate of the Ατλαντες infra (cp. Papanavres, Pauparavres). It has even been suggested that the name Atlas (Atlantes, Atarantes) is a softened form of Adrar, mountain, the chain of mountains still called by the Berbers

Marien, Adarcren, in the plural. (Saint-Martin, p. 60.) ἀνάνυμοι. Other ancient authorities are quoted by Bachr, but a total abare quoted by Bacht, but a total absence of proper names is unparalleled and inconceivable. Rawlinson therefore concludes that Hdt. "probably misundersteod his informant." Stein quotes Od. 6. 552 ob μεν γάρ πις πάμπαν ἀνώνεμδε ἐστ' ἀνθρώπων. Μαγ it not be that the report rests on a misconcention of a savage taboo or misconception of a savage taboo, or custom of silence, in regard to proper names (cp. 1. 146 custom of the Karian women μή κοτε έμοσιτήσαι τοῦσι ἀνδράσι μηδὲ οὐνόματι βῶσαι τὸν ἐωιτῆς drδρa): for instances and explanation of which, see Tylor, Early History of Mankind, pp. 141 ff.

5. υπερβάλλοντα. Some of the commentators halt between two opinions here, viz. between II. and III. in L. & S. sub voc. Stein's nimis urenti seems best: in which case the passage should be placed in L. & S. under H. Rawlinson's "when the sun rises high in the heaven" is ambiguous: does it mean midday, or midsummer, or midsummer-midday? Strabo $22 describes an Aethiopian tribe, πρὸς τῷ διακεκαυμένη, as cursing the rising sun. "When one really feels the high temperature is when down with fever; or when fever, unknown to one, is coming on. Then, indeed, the heat becomes maddening and insupportable; nor has the victim words to express his feelings towards

10. "Ατλας. Hdt.'s last oasis or station lands us at the foot of Mount Atlas, somewhere south of Carthage, or of Tunis. This description of Mount Atlas in no respect corresponds to the local facts. If there be any more than fancy in it the description might have arisen from some distorted account of the Peak of Teneriffe, combined with a knowledge of mountainous ground in the west of the mainland. The region of the Atlas embraces the whole district between the Atlantic and the Syrtis minor, comprising roughly speaking Marocco, Algeria, and Tunis, and bounded on the south by the Sahara. The Atlas proper, or Great Atlas, is a lofty mountain range wholly within Marocco: there are however two lesser mountain ranges in Algeria, parallel to the coast, to which French geographers give the names of lesser and middle Atlas. The highest points attain an elevation of about 5000 feet. A third chain to the south is called by some French geographers the Great Atlas: the term Sahara Berder range is to be preferred. (K. Johnston's Africa, c. ii.) From a comparison of these facts with Hdt.'s statements it is plain that he is quite ignorant of the true orography of the country, and in particular moves Mount Atlas 15-20° long, to the east, and converts it into Marocco: there are however two lesser long, to the cast, and converts it into a single peak.

λέγονται. Hdt. makes no pretence to have seen the column of Heaven, nor should it be inferred that he claims to have conversed with the natives, cp. Introduction, p. lxxvii. The metaphor is due to Greek poetry (Aischyl. Fr. Find. 357) and not to local fancy, which could not have applied such an hyperbole to the Algerian ranges: but it need not to the Algerian ranges; but it need not be original in Aischylos, and it has a Semitic ring about it (ep. Job 26, 11, "The pillars of heaven tremble, and are astonished at his reproof." See also Exodus 13, 21). We seem in this chapter to come more clearly within range of western sources: it is not likely that traders and men of science in Macrae Graceia and Sicily were in Magna Graecia and Sicily were without their ideas on western Libya, filtered through Liby-Phoenician sources perhaps. Cp. c. 181 supra, and Intro-duction, pp. xevii. ff. 16. tvomua opav. The Atlantes are vegetarians and never dream: cause and effect! That mountaineers should eat no flesh is obviously improbable. Clouds, indeed, rest upon Atlas and the Atlantes, and if not dreamers themselves, they still are the cause of dreams in others—of which the last specimen is Knotel's Atlantis und das Volk der Atlanten, Leipzig, 1893, one of those works in which much learning and little judgment have combined to pro-

185. 2. τὸ δ' ἀπὸ τούτων. The easis (κολωνός άλος και εδωρ) of the Atlantes carries us no farther than the eastern frontiers of modern Algeria, if so far: it would be rash to identify Hdt.'s last διήκει δ' ών ή οφρύη μέχρι Πρακλέων στηλέων και το έξω τουτέων. έστι δὲ άλός τε μέταλλον εν αὐτῆ διὰ δέκα ἡμερέων όδοῦ καὶ άνθρωποι οἰκέοντες. τὰ δὲ οἰκία τούτοισι πᾶσι ἐκ τῶν άλίνων 5 χόνδρων οἰκοδομέαται. ταῦτα γὰρ ήδη τῆς Λιβύης ἄνομβρά ἐστι οὐ γὰρ ἀν ήδυνέατο μένειν οἱ τοῖχοι ἐόντες ἄλινοι, εἰ ὖε. ὁ δὲ ἀλς αὐτόθι καὶ λευκὸς καὶ πορφύρεος τὸ εἶδος ὁρύσσεται, ὑπὲρ δὲ τῆς station with Ghadames, or with any of the cases of the Algerian Sahara (on these, see K. Johnston's Africa, pp.

3. διήκει δ' ων. The δφρίη is practically a tigment, but the desert south of Algeria and Marocco is only bounded on the west by the ocean, and is crossed north and south, east and west, by caravan routes (see K. Johnston's Africa, e. viii.), with stations at very irregular intervals.

έξω τουτέων. A legitimate inference from this phrase is that Hdt.

conceives of Libya as projecting beyond the meridian of the straits. The extension of the desert to the ocean was known to Hanno. Cp. c. 181 supra.
4. ton. . olklovres. Do these words introduce a fresh easis-station, or simply -as Rawlinson takes it-resume the description of the whole line of stationa? He translates: "throughout the whole distance, at the end of every ten days' journey, there is a salt-mine, with people dwelling round it." It is not indeed quite clear whether "the whole distance" means "the whole remaining distance," or the whole distance from Thebes to the Pillars of Herakles (c. 181 supra): apparently the latter. In this case Rawlinson identifies μέταλλου alds here with kolweds ales in ec. 181, 152 supra: and to make his translation good we should require utralla not utrallo. Oddly enough in his note, vol. iii. p. 160, he writes μέταλλα. The τούτοισι πασι and the των άλ. χόνδρων (the latter recalling c. 181, supra) seem to support, or to have suggested, R.'s view. Stein, Blakesby and Bachr all understand the words here to refer to another (sixth) station beyond the Atlantes, and so grammatically the words must be taken; but the remark falls short of what we might expect. If the oppin extends beyond Mount Atlas, and beyond the Pillars, would Hdt. be content with one single station in all that remaining distance? It looks as though what he was for saying, when his heart failed him, was that throughout the remainder of the δαρώη the same rule held good as obtained as far as Atlas, viz. that at regular intervals of ten days' journey, as far as ever the sand-ridge went, were oases; or salt and fresh-water stations: he has only courage for one more station explicitly. The result is some obscurity and clumsiness: a falling between two stools. Cp. the still more conspicuous instance, 6. 57

that part of it beyond Atlas.
5. τούτοισι πάσι. Obseure: does it refer to the inhabitants of the single station west of Atlas, just mentioned: in which case \(\pi \alpha \tilde{\alpha} \tilde{\eta} \) seems jejune and superfluous: or to all the inhabitants of all the salt-stations, which seems suggested by τῶν ἀλ. χ. repeated from e. 181? As matter of fact the houses built of salt-blocks are genuine, and have been seen by modern travellers in the Libyan desert and in Fezzan (see Rawlinson) though not apparently in the mison) though hot apparently in the western Sahara.

6. ήδη. Even so far north. Cp.
c. 191 infra. ταθτα may be taken to apply to the whole parallel of the δφρόη.
The remark looks suspiciously like an inference from the argument introduced by the γάρ following. Cp. c. 189 infra.

7. δ 81 als. Three different coloured

2. ο δε αλε. Three different coloured salts are found, reddish, white, bluish: see authorities quoted by Rawlinson.

8. ὑπὶρ κτλ. This is an exaggerated account of the Sahara. Cp. K. Johnston, Africa, ec. vii. viii., though Tristram, The Great Sahara, Appendix I. (On the physical geography of the Sahara), using sahara; in a restricted course for the Sahara in a restricted sense for the sandy pasture land, distinguishes from it the Desert to the south "arid, salt, affording no sustinence to cattle or sheep, . . . excepting in its rare oases, equally inhospitable to man." The camel however snatches a seanty subsistence, and there are the rare oases.

186. 1. ούτω μέν. There follows, rather abruptly, an account of the culture of the Nomad Libyans between Egypt and Lake Tritonis (cc. 186-190): geographically and thing aphically the scene shifts back to where we were in c. 180: or perhaps to the close of c. 183. As already observed ce. 184 f. seem to belong to a somewhat different stratum, and to carry us, though vaguely, far beyond the 'Lake Tritonis.' Moreover κρισφάγοι is inapplicable to the "Ατλαντες of c. 184, and bears out the suspicion that cc. 184 f., if not the whole passage on the Oases (ec. 181-185), are an addition, or contaguination. The description following is presumably intended to apply generally to the tribes previously enumerated (omitting c. 184): but it is inapplieable to the Lotophagi described c. 177. Flesh and milk are the proper food of 'Nomads,' so Hippokr. de wer. et love. § 94, αὐτοὶ δ' ἐσθιστα κρέα ἐφθὰ καὶ πίνουσι γάλα ἴππων (upud health). Bachir).

The Egyptians abstained for a theological reason, 2. 41. As milk was so important to the Libyans they may have had a good economical reason. In Kyrene and Barka, however, the cult of Isis may have been established, as well as among the Libyan the Ciprek tribes. The women in the Greek colonies would be native Libyans to some extent. Barka was more Libyan than Kyrene (cp. c. 160 supra) and the women of Barka were more puritan than those of Kyrene. On pigs, see 2. 47: and c. 63 supra. The flesh of swine was extremely popular with Hellenes: cp. Od. ξ (14) 13-20, ct al.

187. 1. τὸ δὲ κτλ. R. Neumann (ep. c. p. 10) suggests that Hdt, borrows the distinction between E. and W. Libya from Hekataios. Cp. Fray. 305. This may be so, but Hdt.'s visits to Egypt and Italy if not to Kyrene itself would at least have confirmed the borrowed idea. The first sentence of this chapter prepares us for further contrasts, to be resumed c. 191, between the ethnography of eastern and that of western Libya, i.e. the spheres of Aegypto-Hellenic and of Carthaginian influence respectively.

2. ούκέτι νομάδες είσι = οίκετι is virtually locative, ep. 187 previous c. It is difficult to reconcile Hdt.'s statement that west of the Lesser Syrtis there were no Nomads, with the well-grounded geography of the later and Roman authorities, which designated the western portion as Numidia pur excellence; and though the Carthaginians are known to have promoted agriculture (ep. Iricl. Antiq. i. 3 55), the nomad life of shepherds and herdsmen never died out in the west (c). Capes, Sallust, Introduction, pp. 38, 39). The view of Hdt. points to purely parathalassic sources of information, and it was just about his time that a decided effort was made by the Carthaginians to promote husbandry, cp. Montusen, Rom. Hist. Bk. iii. c. i. (E. T. ii. p. 2), Meltzer, Gesch. der Karthager, i. 82.

3. roioi avroioi. Same as the Nomads.

5. el μέν πάντες . . συχνοί. This appearance of statistical accuracy is somewhat disconcerting, especially as it might seem to imply that other general statements in Libyan ethnography are based upon an exhaus-tive analysis of evidences. But what evidence could Hdt. have to justify him in asserting that none of the tribes west of Tritonis practised the cautery here described, or anything like it (olov Tt) !

7. olony, v.l. olovny, but the same word, meaning apparently grease: thus the oldern, Aristoph. Achiera. 1177. olouris is a tuft of greasy wool: and that seems the sense here required. Cp. L. & S.7 sub voc. and add σίσπώτη

(Aristoph. Lys. 575).

Canterisation is a wide-spread remedy for various maladies, and was not peculiar to the Libyan nomads, nor confined to the object here specified. Aethiopians, Seythians, Ostiaks, Arabs, Beduins, Moors, Negroes are stated by Bachr, on various authorities, to have employed this method. Rawlinson quotes from Denham a description of the cure as "the sovereign Arab remedy for almost every disorder." But it might almost every disorder." But it might surprise Greeks, who favoured milder methods. Cp. 3, 130.

11. πάντων ὑγιηρότατοι τῶν ἡμεῖς τομον. On the formula, cp. Introduction, p. civ. The healthness of the Libyans is a fixed maxim with Hdt., cp. 2, 77. Tristram in his preface speaking of the northern Sahara (of Algiers) says: "Here an atmosphere bright, dry, and invigorating convinced me that I had found the true sanatorium for any one sufficiently convalescent to dispense with the luxuries of city life." (Op. c. p. v.)

13. σπασμός. The convulsion happens to the infant not to the operator, as we infer rather from the nature of the sion. Van H. suggests καιόντων.

14. λέγω κτλ. Cp. c. 173 supra. His scepticism apparently extends only to the two points: (1) the reason alleged for Libyan health: (2) the έκος asserted as good for convulsions.

188. 1. Ovolar. Sacrificial rites, one of Hdt.'s standing categories in ethnography. Cp. c. 00 supra.

2. τὸν δόμον. As Nomads they are searce entitled to houses: Reiske suggested ἀμον. Cp. c. 100 tafra.

3. ἀποστρέφειν is used of turning back the hands so as to bind them behind the back, ἀποστρέφετε τὰς χεῖρας αὐτῶν, ὡ Σκύθαι, Aristoph. Lysestr. 405. Here we may take it of turning back the neck so as to cut it. αύχεν άποστρέψας occurs in Theognis $58 with a different intention: αύχεν ἀποστρέψας ούδ έσοραν ήλίω και σελήνη μούνοισι. If they offered sperifices to sun and moon alone it would follow that sun and moon were the only divinities recognised by them. This is not likely, by analogy, and the words following qualify it for the Libyans on the shores of Lake Tritonis. e. 172 supera to some extent suggests a qualification for the Nasamones, though that passage does not concern outland. The Atarantes of c. 181 could hardly be described as sun-

5. Adva(q. Athene as worshipped in Libya was hardly, perhaps, to be distinguished from the Moon-goddess. Triton is the River-god, Poseidon the Sea god. Cp. c. 180 supra. The qualification here added after the strong statement (μοίνοισι) just made looks like a later correction, inserted perhaps from a different (western) source. 189. 2. τῶν ἀγαλμάτων τῆς ᾿Αθηναίης. There are two archaeological questions raised in this chapter and answered by Hdt, in favour of Libya. (1) Were the snakes on the aigis of Athene originally leather thongs? (2) Was the airis itself derived from Libya? That the snakes of the airis were originally leather thongs, forming a sort of tasselled fringe round the aigis, may be regarded as no less probable than that the aigis was itself originally a skin. (2) That the aigis, and indeed the whole vesture $(\sigma ro\lambda h)$ of the statues of Athene, were derived from Libya is by no means so probable. In Homeric poems the aigis is not confined to Athene, but proper to Zeus and Apollo likewise. The use to Zeus and Apollo litewise. The use of skins, undressed and dressed, for clothing and defence, was not confined to the Libyans. Hdt. asserts that the Quadript was introduced among the Greeks from Libya, which is at least disputable, and hazards an opinion that the δλολγή was also of Libyan which is own laws weeks has origin, which is even less probable. The theory of the Libyan origin of the aigis hardly deserves more favour, even if aigis originally meant 'goat-skin, unless we are to suppose that there were no goats but in Libya. Cp. Pauly, R.-E. 1893, i. 970 ff. or (as a δεύτερος πλοῦς) Diet. Antiq. 3 sub v. ILLUSTRA-

Tions, Baumeister, Deakmaler der Kloss. Alterthage, v. ATHENE. See further infr. tx, 'after the fashion,' a bi mode; but no other examples of this meaning are produced, nor do L. & S. notice it. In any case the statement of fact here made is plainly an (errone-ous) inference from the following ob-servation which is introduced by \(\gamma \text{in} \).

Cp. c. 185 supra.

Λιβυσσέων. 'Native Libyan women' is generally understood.

emorhoavro. The natural force and meaning would be that the Hellenes in the first instance got the women of Libya to make them the dress for Athene.

3. πλην κτλ. The exception here is everything. The commentators seem to overlook the fact that the early is not the same as the alyles. Helt, goes so far as to say that the whole iσθής, the whole στολή of the statues of Athene, was of Libyan origin: this cannot be treated as a serious archaeological problem now. Whatever may be said in regard to the alpir, the rest of Athene's attire, whether archaic or later, has nothing in common with Libyan leather. Cp. 5. 88 infra.

5. τὰ ἄλλα πάντα. Very Are we to understand that the Libyan women were leathern laths under their alyides, or that they were nothing at all but the airides with the leathern fringe! In Ethiopia (teste Wilkinson apud Rawl.) the alyls has dwindled to a mere apron of thongs: see illustrations in Rawlinson. The use of such fringes is largely exemplified in Westermarck, op. c. c. ix., according to whose theory such things are not defensive but decorative.

6. τὸ οὄνομα. The argument, even if etymologically correct, does not prove the point : Hdt. should first have proved that airis is the native Libyan word. The derivation of alyls is doubtful.

αίγέας γὰρ περιβάλλουται ψιλὰς περὶ τὴν ἐσθῆτα θυσανωτὰς αἰ Λίβυσσαι κεχριμένας ἐρευθεδάνω, ἐκ δὲ τῶν αἰγέων τουτέων αἰγίδας οἰ ελληνες μετωνύμασαν. δοκέει δὶ ἔμοιγε καὶ ὀλολυγὴ ἐν ἰροῖσι ἐνθαῦτα πρῶτον γενέσθαι κάρτα γὰρ ταύτη χρέωνται καλῶς 10 αἰ Λίβυσσαι. καὶ τέσσερας ἵππους συζευγνύναι παρὰ Λιβύων οἰ Ελληνες μεμαθήκασι. θάπτουσι δὲ τοὺς ἀποθνήσκοντας οἰ 190

Its connexion with at may be an early Volks symolegie, and the false etymology, the 'disease of language,' may have led to the investiture of Athene with a goat-skin breastplate. The fact that leathern armour was in common use, and the belief that the war-goddess would need her lorica as much as helmet or spear, would facilitate the artistic representation of the alyls or (Cloud) shield of Zeus, or of Athene, by a lorica, or skin doublet. Whatever may be thought of meteorological mythology in general, the association of the alyls with the weather seems incontrovertible (see Roseher, Lexicon, p. 150), and it looks as though the cloud became a breastplate in passing from poetry to sculpture.

S. (ρευθεδάνφ. The archaic statues of Athene found on the Akropolis (cp. Rhomoides, Les Musées d'Athenes, Livr. 1°, 2°) were touched with vermilion now alas! rapidly fading from exposure. Vermilion is still the favourite colouring in Tripoli and Marocco, see Rawlinson, note ad I. But such analogies do not prove causal connexion. The dye here mentioned is venetable. Cp. e. 191 infra. 9. δοκία κτλ. This sentence con-

9. δοκάι κτλ. This sentence contains an hypothesis of Helt.'s own invention, it may therefore be inferred that he had authority for the antecedent ascription of the Palladian costume and the Quadriga to Libya. The δλολεγή was proper to the worship of Athene, and presamably as ancient as the cultivelf. Hom. Il. 6. 301. If introduced into Greece from outside, it was surely from the East. It is a cry of triumph or exultation (opposed to κωκυτός Eurip. Med. 1176, cp. L. & S.): perhaps connected with the Semitic Hallelu (which appears in Hallelu-iah).

11. τέσσερας κτλ. This statement has been generally sacrificed by commentators even the most loyal (ep. Rawlinson, note ad L, R. Neumann, op. cit. p. 141), but on insufficient grounds. The four-horsed chariot is now no longer to be found in the genuine Homer, for Il. 8. 185 is obviously spurious, and Il. 11. 629 probably a late insertion (cp. W. Leaf, Iliad, note ad l.), 15. 670 is not a case in point, and Od. 13. 81 is a late insertion. That the Quadriga was used at the games of the 25th Olympiad = 680 a.c., ep. Clinton, Fasti ad ana. is rather more than Pausanias 5. S, 3 expressly asserts, and in any case the statement (by Africanus opud Euseb.) must rest on inferences and combinations far from indisputable, It is even questionable whether the Olympian dyw itself was in existence, or at least of Panhellenic significance, as early as 680 n.c. (Cp. Bury, Nemean Odes, Appendix D, p. 258.) All that can be said against Hdt. on this score is that, assuming him to mean that the τέθριππος was introduced to the Greeks through Kyrene (cp. c. 170 supra), this statement conflicts-not with ascertained facts-but with the statement that the τέθριππος was used at Olympia in 680 me. This conflict is an argument against the chronologists rather than against Hdt., for if the quadriga was introduced at Olympia after the foundation of Kyrene, so much the worse for the chronology of the early Olympiads (cp. Mahaffy, On the authenticity of the Olympian Register, J. H. S. vol. ii., reprinted in Problems in Greek History. 1892). But Hdt. does not expressly say when the Greeks took this hint from the Libyans, or what Greeks first took it. The Libyan example was, it might be argued, borrowed either directly, or through Egypt, before the foundation of Kyrene, and even perhaps at a very early date, in the time of Libyan Pharaohs (cp. Appendix XII.). Clearly the statement in Hdt. is an inference, not a tradition: but it may be a sound inference, even though he was hardly entitled to make it. The assertion (Smith, Diet. Antop. sub v. Currus) that the Lydians drove four-horsed chariots appears to repose on a mistranslation of Aischylos, Person, 47.

2. κατά περ of Έλληνες, without thereby implying that the practice of recumbent burial was borrowed on either side. It is only this one point which is in view, presumably.

The Nasamones practised Divination at the tombs of their ancestors, c. 172 supra, and the peculiar posture of the dead may be connected with their necromancy. Others, including the ancient Britons, have used the sitting-posture (Rawlinson ad l.).

3. ἀπιῆ, sc. ὁ ἀποθνήσκων, ' the dying man.'

Sallust, Jug. 18, ceterum adhue acdificia Numidarum agrestium quae mapalia illi vocant oblonga incurvis lateribus tecta quasi navium carinae sunt. The original form of the word was perhaps magaria. See Capes, Sallust, note in l. c. The resemblance to an inverted ship seems to have given rise to the story related in Sallust. For these tabernacles (περιφορητά) cp. φερέσικοι c. 46 stopra.

191. 1. Αὐστων. The Ausees, separated from the Machlyes by the river Triton, still belong to the Nomad Libyans, according to Hdt. Beyond the Ausees lie the Maxyes, with whom Agriculture begins. The situation of these tribes would be west and north of the Lake Tritonis, as the land here projects again in a way which Hdt. does not appear to realise. The Maxyes seem to occupy the district afterwards named Byzacium. They were mentioned in the Periogesis of Hekataios as Majves, Muller, Frag. Hek. 304 (vol. i. p. 23). Saint-Martin op. c. p. 58 identifies them with the Maxitani of Justin, 18. 6, in whose territory Carthage was built. The establishment of the Tyrians there would naturally press the tribe down south. Aegyptologists see in the Maxues of Hdt. (An and the name) the descendants of the Maschuascha (Maschuascha E. Meyer) who from the days of the 19th dynasty onward play a rôle of growing importance in Egyptian history, until finally they become the dominant power in the land (ep. Wiedemann, Aeg. Gesch. §§ 37 ff. and Appendix XII.).

2. $\(\begin{align*} \beta \pi_1 \). Cp. c. 185 supra. This chapter carries us into the country west of the Lesser Syrtis, i.c. into the modern Tunis and Algeria. Physically and politically the region was in the days of Hdt. as it is in the present day separated and divided from the eastern parts of Libya. We pass here, so to speak, into the sphere of Carthaginian influence. Geographically the whole area between the Gulf of Cabes (Lesser Syrtis) on the east and the Atlantic on the west, and bounded by the Mediterranean on the north and the Desert on the south, is the Region of the Atlas, and is virtually a huge island, belonging rather to Europe than to Africa. Cp. Tristram, The Great Sahara, p. 360, "To the naturalist North Africa is but an European island" etc., and especially Grant Allen, in Conetc., and especially Grant Alien, in Con-temp. Review, vol. 53 (1888), pp. 526 ff. Legend connected the population of the region with the Iberian peninsula, pro-bably correctly (ep. Sallust, Jug. 18). The Arab conquest long obliterated the earlier relations of lands and peoples in the western Muditerrayan but the the western Mediterranean, but the natural frontiers are now reasserting themselves.

This region is the true island of Atlantis, if the Greeks had only known it. A very remarkable fact is this, that the three zones, which are sought for in vain in eastern Libya, are found in Algeria and this region to perfection. See K. Johnston's Africat, c. ii. This scheme of parallel belts is specially conspicuous in Algeria; there

κέεται Μάξυες οι τὰ ἐπὶ δεξιὰ τῶν κεφαλέων κομόωσι, τὰ δ' ἐπ' άριστερά κείρουσι, το δε σώμα χρίονται μίλτω. φασί δε ούτοι είναι των έκ Τροίης ανδρών. ή δε χώρη αυτη τε και ή λοιπή της 5 Λιβύης ή προς έσπέρην πολλώ θηριωδεστέρη τε καί δασυτέρη έστί τής των νομάδων χώρης. ή μεν γάρ δή προς την ήω της Λιβύης, την οι νομάδες νέμουσι, έστι ταπεινή τε και ψαμμώδης μέχρι του Τρίτωνος ποταμού, ή δε από τούτου το προς έσπέρην ή των

"three belts may be clearly distinguished—the Tell, the region of uplands or steppes, and the Algerian Sahara," op. c. p. 18. The Tell is the arable and cultivated land. Cp. Tristram, op. c. p. 52, "it was needless for those who were masters of the Tell to invade the Sahara. As the southern nomads say of themselves, 'We are the subjects of our stomachs.' The Tell is their only granary, whence they procure corn by barter for wool, hides, dates, ostrichfeathers etc.'

Could it be that Hdt.'s conception of Libya and its zones (c. 181 supra) is an extension and generalisation of the characteristics of that part of Africa under Carthaginian supremacy or influence, a knowledge of which he may have first acquired after his migration to Sicily! Or a dim vision of which may have been passed on to Egypt by Phoenicians or Hellenes?

φασι κτλ. A few years ago this statement might have been dismissed as a purely Hellenic theory, resting on some merely fanciful or pragnatic combinations. Even now it can hardly be allowed to take rank as literal truth: but the fresh evidences and new methods of the last decade or two have very much modified the attitude of scholars to such statements, and we are disposed to see a larger and sounder de-posit of historic fact in them than our producessors were able to admit. 1. The Asiatic origin of a part of the population of 'Libya' is a tenable hypothesis. Cp. Appendix XII. 2. Whether a direct racial connexion existed between tribes of Libya and tribes of Asia Minor or not (ep. Which mann's denial of the identity of the Asiatic Schakalscha and the Libyan Schekelscha, op. cd. p. 499), it will be generally recognised that the Egyptian evidences open up possibilities of intercourse and contact between Libyans and minor-Asiatics, some traditions of which may very well underlie the theories regarding Trojan colonies in the west. That Hdt. had this particular statement from natives is less likely than that he had it from Graeco-Egyptian or Sikeliot sources, if indeed it was not

 ή δὶ χώρη κτλ. Hdt, here commits himself to a description of the rest of Libya, i.e. the modern Tunis, Algeria, and Marocco, or Region of the Atlas. Blakesley thinks the account of the country and its terrors an exaggeration due to Carthaginians, who wished to keep the region to themselves. Rawlinson regards the passage as an accurate description of the general differences between the eastern and western regions of North Africa. It is, however, obvious that although Hdt. has an idea of a strong contrast between Libya east and west of 'Lake Tritonis,' he has no clear idea of the character of the west, nor does he suspect that the description which he has given of eastern Libya, applies much better to the west. There is, moreover, a slight inconsequence in his employing h dandons of the inner belt of his eastern Libya and here going on to describe western Libya as molly θηριωδεστέρη.

The Fauna and Flora of the Algerian Sahara are very fully described in Tristram, op. c. App. IV-VIII., and for a more general description of the products of North Africa, K. Johnston's Africa, pp. 28, 29.

The Tell is described now as planted with numerous forests as well as containing luxuriant pasture lands in addition to its fertile and arable settlements (Africa, p. 19). The second belt, behind the Tell and the Algerian range, is sandy, but supplies folder, and in some favoured spets corn (ib. p. 20). This second belt as steppe land is succeeded by the Sahara.

Few will hesitate to identify these with the large apes of Africa, some report of which might easily have reached Magna Graecia, Egypt, or the Levant, for their skins had been seen at Carthage, Hanno, Peripl. 18 (Geogr. Min. i. 13 f.). Bachr, however, disputes this identification, and is so much offended by the harshness of the text (dropes . . kal alla . . Onpla), that he is strongly disposed to regard the words of appear arboes and preaises

15. άλλα πλήθει πολλά covers a long catalogue, Hdt.'s list of authentic beasts being very short, and a marked contrast to the fuller details that follow in the next c. for eastern Libya.

Kriger follows Reiz in reading karayevord. The MS. reading is defensible; Hdt. has indicated his scepticism just above. But van Herwerden's suggestion kal karayevord kal akarayevora avoids the dilemma.

192. 1. τούτων οὐδέν. The contrast between the fauna east and west of the Triton is certainly exaggerated. Foxes, jackals, and other beasts here confined to the east are, and probably were, found west of 'Triton': while among the άλλα πολλά θηρία άκατάψειστα of western Libya would surely be included some not unknown to the Greeks of Kyrene, Naukratis, or Thurii.

 πύγαργος is mentioned by Aristot. Hist. Anim. 618b as a kind of eagle. Here it appears to be a kind of untelope.

ζορκάδες. Bacht reads δοριαδες (cp. 7. 69), not without MSS, authority (doprées Holder 3). R. tr. "gazelles."

βουβάλιες. R. renders "buffaloes." Buffaloes are found in N. Africa, but there is some doubt whether the BoiBakes was not a variety of antelope.

Blakesley has a suggestive exentsus on the word, which he is inclined to regard as a primitive Greek or 'Pelegian' term for Mother Earth, and ventures to trace it in Gaelic, Latin, Old English and other tongues. The word has more usually been regarded as having been introduced from Africa into the Greek language. Whatever its origin it was not Attic, and was foreign or archaic in Hellas proper in the time of Hdt. But it was used at Kyrene (c. 199 infer), it was used in Sicily, and it is found in later Greek, LXX., Polybius (Jourdons), Diodorus Siculus (Borrocions), Strabo and Pausamas, It was reliculed as a foreign word by the comic poet Philamon. Aischylos used the word Boost after his visit to Sicily (Supp. 109, 756) where the word was probably early in vogue, perhaps through the connexion with Labya. Assuming this passage now before us, which occurs in all the MSS., to be genuine, we might see in the use of the word Bower a further evidence of Sicilian influences on this portion of Hdt.'s text.

yakaî. yakar van II. Rawlinson states that the weasel appears on coins of Kyrene below the silphium, apparently after Bachr, after Wesseling, after Haym (Theorur. Brit. ii. 124). Gazelle, jerboa, lion are given by Head (Hist. Num.) and Gardner (Types of Greek Coins), but no

The Tapproofper. We need not infer from this comparison that Hdt. was ever in Tartessos. It would be easier to bring a Spanish weasel to Thurii than the Greek historian to Spain. But it is not even necessary to suppose that Hdt, had seen either the weasel of Tartessos or that of Kyrene. It was enough that he had authority for the statement. Cp. Introduction, § 20.

15. τοσαῦτα. Among the beasts enumerated by Hdt, as inhabiting Africa the modern traveller would certainly miss the camel; it appears that the camel was not known in Libya until after the Arab conquest. Cp. Enc.

16. Soov KTA. That his imquiries were conducted an Ort und Stelle is not asserted by Hdt., nor should we be justified in excluding written authorities from the range of his laropla. Rather must it be admitted that, if there were any written authorities in existence, the claim advanced in these words would be exaggerated, unless the historian had consulted them too (c.g. Hekataies). Moreover, whether this passage was written or was left standing after Hdt. migrated to the west, we must suppose that he did not neglect to make himself acquainted in the west with those sources of information about Libya, which would certainly have been available there. Cp. Introduction, pp. xevii. ff.

193. 1. Magówv 86, c. 191 supra. The preceding excursus on the fauna has interrupted the ethnography. In this case they must have been dis-placed between the Roman time and the Musulman conquest. Their geographical situation (see next chapter) suits with the former identification.

έν τοῖσι ὅρισι. This phrase is astonishing, as Hdt. makes no use elsewhere

195. 1. λέγουσε Καρχηδόνιοι. expression suggests that Hdt. had not visited the country; but it does not prove that he had conversed with Carthaginians, cp. next c. If he held any such converse, it might have been in Seily; or the 'Carthaginian' account might have been gathered there. See might have been gathered there. See Introduction, p. lxxviii.

2. Kėpauv. Now generally identified with the island Cercina, modern Kerkenna or Kerk'na, in the gulf of Cabes, just opposite Sfaks, which fixes the district under review as identical with Byzacium. Meltzer, Gesch. d. Karthanger, i. 77, 231, argues that a dim knowledge of the island of Kerne in the Atlantic is combined with a better Atlantic is combined with a better knowledge of Cercina, to produce the Herodotean Kyranis. From this point of view the description of the situation of Kerne, in the meridian of Carthage, is remarkable: cp. Hanno, Periplus 8

(Geog. Min. i. 7). R. Neumann (Nord-airika, 64 fl.) argues that the wine and oil are taken from Djerba: and con-cludes that the description of Kyraus is a combination of points taken from Karkeneh, Djerba, and Kerne, or one of the other West African islands (gold).

3. διαβατόν έκ τ. ή. is translated by Rawlinson: "soon reached from the mainland." Hdt. appears to mean that the passage between the land and the island is fordable. Cp. 1. 75 ad fin. 6. ταῦτα μέν. Hat,'s scepticism is here much to the point, as there appears to be no evidence of any gold in the island, though gold perhaps was found in the interior of Africa. A more or less misunderstood method of procuring the gold dust may have been transferred to the site of exchange, «τη δ' Δν πῶν. Cp. 5. 9, and Intro-

Zακύνθφ. The tar springs of Zante are guaranteed by many authorities, ancient and modern: Ktesias, Indic. 10, Pliny, 35. 15; Chandler, Dodwell, Haw-kins, among the moderns. Cp. quotation frem Chandler, apud Rawlinson. Bursian, Geogr. der Griedenl. ii. 380 f., locates the chief tar well close to the S.W. coast, near Cape Chieri, and mentions a second curious phenomenon, an oil spring, rising in a grotto, or cave, only approachable from the sea, north of the east coast of the island. Hdt. may very well have visited Zante, en route for Thurii and the west. This allusion is a fresh confirmation of the hypothesis that the Aspecol horse betray western influences and were not compiled in Egypt and Kyrene (merely). Cp. Introduction, pp. xevii if.

have been no water in the λίμνη, hence the word is added. Alarn is a curious word to apply to the object which other travellers have described as a 'well, or 'spring.' "The spring most distinct and apt for inspection" is described by Chandler as four or tive feet in diameter. There may have been seventy feet square of water or marsh-land round the well referred to by Hdt. The ground has apparently undergone change since his time, as the tar springs are now close to the coast (cp. Bursian, ap. cit. supra). The tar is very poor, and there is no communication between the wells and the sea. Blakesley suggests that Hdt. was perhaps misled by the sight of the tar floating on the sea off the island. In 6. 119 a still more wonderful well is described, but Hdt. makes the more of the Zante springs, because he has seen them with his own eyes. Besides, he introduces this experience to confirm a Carthaginian story, feeling perhaps that Carthaginian authority did not rank high with Hellenes.

δρωρυγμένον. The so-called Attic reduplication, δρώρυγμαι, is more common than ἄρριγμαι. Cp. ἀλάλημαι, ἀραίρηλα. 14. οῦτω κτλ. The fact that there were tar wells in Zante, an island off Peloponnese, hardly goes far to prove that there was a gold well in Kyrauis an island off Libya, nor if a branch of myrtle was used to catch the pitch does it follow that a bunch of feathers would draw the gold. Speaking generally, however, it is a wonderful world, and one ought to be ready to believe a good deal about it ($\epsilon i \eta - \delta'$ av $\pi \hat{a} \nu$). Cp. Introduction, § 22.

196. 1. λέγουσι. Hdt. discounts the story by adducing the authority. That he had it direct from men of Carthage he does not assert (as for example Meltzer op. cit. p. 235 infers: der Umstand, dass Herodot diese Nachrichten nach eigner Angabe aus dem Munde von Karthagern erhalten hat u. s. w.). The reality of a 'dumb commerce' of the kind described in this chapter is fully borne out by modern authorities, instances being adduced from the Sudan, i.e. the region of Africa between the desert of Sahara and the Equator. Senegambia or the Gold Coast would answer to the geographical indications in the Carthaginian story, which inter alia goes to show that the Carthaginians had more extensive dealsuspected. The Periplus of Hanno (Muller, Geogr. Minor. i. pp. 1-14) points to the same conclusion. Modern authorities are cited in Bachr and Rawlinson. Meltzer (op. cit. p. 234) speaking of Hdt.'s knowledge of the further west observes that it is not to be sup-posed that Hdt. had the Periplus of Hanno in his hands: but none the less his information may be ultimately due to Hanno's expedition.

12. aὐτούς. Bekker suggests aὐτοἱ which would be the normal construction, as in c, 137 supra λέγοντος οὖτε αὐτὸς ετὰ. The converse case is found as Stein points out in 1. 56 οὐδ' ἀν αὐτὸς οὐδὶ οἱ (instead of τοὺς) ἐξ αὐτοῦ παθσεσθαί κοτε τῆς ἀρχῆς. The whole chapter before us is an interesting example of the sustained oratio obliqua, and a slight grammatical lapse towards the end would not be un-Herodotean.

197. 1. ovros utv. The words do not refer to the passage immediately preceding, but to c. 194, or even c. 191 supra. Cp. c. 167 supra ad fen. vvv again was a challenge to the commentator. Can we be even quits sure that the vcv here was of date strictly contemporaneous with the vcv there ! i.e. belonged both originally to the same draft or stratum of the Argenal Major. Certainly a revision or second edition would synchronise the two, by bringing both down to a common later era. The composition of this part is highly problematic: cp. Introduction, p. xevii.

Λιβνών. The Libyans of Hdt. may be taken to represent the whole Berber stock of North Africa, though the name Libu originally denoted only one powerful tribe or group in the neighbourhood of Egypt. The Aethiopians represent the dark inhabitants of the Sudan. Hdt. does not think it necessary to multiply his native races in order to classify such tribes as he has mentioned 2. 32, or c. 191 supra. Egyptians he does not mention, as Egypt is not with him strictly speaking a part of Libya 2. 17, cp. c. 41 supra, albeit the statement, c. 42, that Libya is circumnavigable, involves the inclusion of Egypt in the continent. The Phoenicians are of course represented by Carthage, and the Hellenes by Kyrene, or the Pentapolis. The ethnography of this passage agrees with that of 2. 32; the Aethiopians must be supplied from 3. 17 ff. (Macrobii), 3. 97 (of xpsisospo Alyúrræ, cp. 7. 60), and c. 183 supra (Troglodytae). (Asiatic Aethiopians are included in the army list of Kutnes 7. 70, cp. 3. 94.) On the modern Ethnology of Africa, see K. Johnston, Africa, Appendix I.

2. Klyumos. Described above c. 175 as in the territory of the Makae, flowing from the Abopos Xapirar. The district is just, so to speak, between the Greater and the Lesser Syrtis. Cp. note ad l. The utterances here on the Kinyps region seem an afterthought, an addition, to the remarks on the river there. This effort in comparative geography may have been suggested to Hdt. after his visit to the west, Sicily and Magna Graceia and the Pontos regions being the best corn-growing regions of Europe known to him, while the references to Babylonia seem to justify the inference that this passage was written or revised subsequently to 1. 193, the very language of this passage reproducing the language of that: Δήμητρος καρπέν εκφέρειν.

199. 2. ὑψηλοτάτη. Here again we have a postscript, which corresponds well to the facts, the Kyrenaica being a high plateau of rocks "projecting in a solid mass into the Mediterranean. . . This plateau gradually descends towards the Egyptian frontier." The height of the upper plateau is estimated at 1700-1800 feet. Hdt. does not, however, appear to be aware that higher points existed even within his nomad Libya in the ranges of the Black Mountains, or Jebel es Soda and Harutsh, which attain an elevation of 2800 feet (Johnston, Africa, p. 69).

5. ἐπολιόρκων. The nine months' siege of Barke (c. 512 n.c. !) was apparently memorable for the mining operations still at that time unfamiliar to

Greeks in warfare. Mining was the Assyrian alternative to Battering as practised by Greeks and Romans (Rawlinson, who refers to Livy 4. 22, 5. 19), and is frequently represented on Assyrian soulpture. Cp. 5. 115, 6. 18 infra (Bl.). Acreas Poliorecticus c. 37 relates the story here told as illustrating one of the ways of hindering mining, without hinting that the Amasis, whom he names was a Persian.

18. Ενα έμπεδορκέσιεν. Το Greek and, if we believe this story, Persian ideas parjury was not perpetrated if the letter of an eath were observed, however completely the spirit might be disregarded. Cp. c. 154 supra. That Spartans were sometimes given to this sort of serupulous duplicity may be seen not merely from the well-known case of Kleomenes and the Argives (ep. 6. 76 ff., notes) but from the anecdotes of Derkyllidas and Thibron preserved in the Breenfer Polymeni 39. 2, 3 (Biblioth. Tealmer. ed. Melber, p. 477). See further L. Schmidt, Die Etheik der alten Grischen, ii. 5 ff.

202. 6. πλην δσοι. This is the first clear mention of any of the Battiad family or party in Barke: but it implies that the record of the proceedings is anything but complete, ep. c. 164 supra. What there was left of the city to entrust to them after the murderers of Arkesilaos had been atrociously penalised and all the rest spoiled by the Persians hardly appears: perhaps the extent to which the common folk of Barke sympathised with the anti-Battiad, anti-tynamic, anti-Medic, and presumably aristocratic or oligarchic party, has been exaggerated in the traditions (see 187, 200 course) in the traditions (cc. 167, 200 suppa).

203. 3. of Kuppualo. This story of the deliverance of Kyrene from the late of Barke is "exceedingly improbable" (as even Rawlinson iii. 175 has observed), not to say, transparently fictitions. It is likely enough that the Persian expedition was not directed against Kyrene, that city being the humble servant of the Persian king (c. 165 suppa): it is likely enough that Kyrene opened its gates to the Persians, and supplied them with provisions. It is not likely that any attack was made on Kyrene. If Kyrene had been in rebellion against the Persian king, or Egyptian governor, its r-duction would have been included in the commonly of Amasis and Badres. The appearance of the admiral on the scene is suspicious: but he is wanted to help out the action, and his presence is probably as fictitious as the oracle (Xinto re), the panic (Acknor-Pan), and the special messenger. The story in short is a fraud on history, due to the pragmatic fancy of the Kyrenaeans, or their friends, and devised long after the events, at a time when it was to the credit of Kyrene to believe and get it believed that she had not medised, but had had her own brush with the Persian, even before the days of Marathon and Salamis. According to Polyaines 8, 47, the expedition of Pheretime was directed against the Kyrenaeans,' but the passage is in general terms, and insufficient to overside the facts implied in the Herodotean stary.

7. Διὸς Αυκαίου. Αυκάων δὲ ὁ Πελασγοῦ τοσάδε εἶρεν ἢ ὁ πατήρ οἱ σοσώτερα. Αυκόσοιρὰν τε γὰρ πόλιν ὅκισεν ἐντῷ ὅρει τῷ Ανκαίο, καὶ Δια ἀνόμασε Αυκαίον, καὶ ἀγῶνα εθηκε Αυκαία. Pausan. 8. 2, 1. The presence of the Arkadian deity or deities at Kyrene speaks volumes for the ethnie character of the population, and would lead us to expect the presence of other than Dorian νόμιμα. 204. 1. ἐς Εὐεσπερίδας. This state-

204. 1. is Evermeploas. This statement, perhaps a genuine reminiscence, militates against the idea employed in the previous c. that Barke was the only goal of the expedition, and betrays the imperfection of the record.

Some Greek captives from Libya may have been an encouraging and appropriate offering to Darcios, after his own expedition into Europe. The king's treatment of these Barkaians anticipated the treatment accorded to the Eretrians, some two or three and twenty years after, 6, 119 infea. This chapter also in the words lti kal és lpl lp suggests problems similar to those raised by the parallel passage: viz., whether our author had visited the place in Bactria referred to here; if so, at what date; whether lti ktl. or the date of any such visit, or the date of composition, or more generally the author's birth, and so forth. But in all such cases it will be found that the autobiographical date carries with it no conclusion as to the autoptic or other character of the evidence (cp. c. 124 supra), a problem to be decided on other grounds: see Introduction, § 21, and this passage does not justify the inference that Hdt. was ever at Barke in Baktria. With lower kéung lykaroukýsai cp. 6. 90 infra.

205 Οὐ μὲν οὐδὲ ἡ Φερετίμη εὖ τὴν ζόην κατέπλεξε. ὡς γὰρ δὴ τάχιστα ἐκ τῆς Λιβύης τισαμένη τοὺς Βαρκαίους ἀπενόστησε ἐς τὴν Αἴγυπτον, ἀπέθανε κακῶς· ζῶσα γὰρ εὐλέων ἐξέζεσε, ὡς ἄρα ἀνθρώποισι αἱ λίην ἰσχυραὶ τιμωρίαι πρὸς θεῶν ἐπίφθονοι 5 γίνονται. ἐκ μὲν δὴ Φερετίμης τῆς Βάττου τοιαύτη τε καὶ τοσαύτη τιμωρίη ἐγένετο ἐς Βαρκαίους.

205. 2. es την Αίγυπτον. If Pheretime really returned to Egypt and died there shortly (circa 510 B.C. ?) her fate and story may have been told in Egypt with the appropriate Greek moral which concludes it (cp. Introduction, § 22). But she left a grandson, Battos, on the throne in Kyrene, of whom these prag-matic traditions take no account (except implicite in the oracle c, 163 supra). She can hardly therefore have been "afraid of remaining in the Cyrenaica" (Rawl.). Perhaps she looked to Egypt not merely for political but for medical aid. She died worm-eaten (σκωληκό-Bowros), and an end so disgusting implied (to a pious Greek) a divine judgment, a previous transgression. The tale of the τίσις, or τιμωρίη ès Bapkalous, supplied what was wanted. Blakesley ad l. gives a list of illustrious victims of the loathsome malady.

5. The Batton and the grandmother of another. Bachr suggests that she may have been the daughter of a third. Stein supplies γυναικὸς and compares das homerische "Εκτορος 'Ανδρομάχη. I have not been able to discover the expression in Riad or Odyssey. Wesseling's note ad l. runs: Id nollem, turpem Vallae errorem, quo Φερετίμης τῆς Βάττεω Pheretimae Batti filiae, per omnes editiones sine animadversione propagari... Vertenti Laurentio non observabatur "Εκτορος 'Ανδρομάχη, etc., etc. Vergil seems to be the author of the phrase Hectoris Andromache, Aen. 3. 319. Bouhier, who was the first to take exception to Valla's filiae (Recherches et Dissertations sur Herodote, Dijon 1746, p. 146), only gives a reference to "the grammarians among others Lambert Bos, Myster. Ellips. Graec.," to prove that in such cases γυνή is to be supplied. But cp. R. Kühner, Ausf. Grammatik d. gr. Sp. § 414. 2, who only gives the Vergilian instance. It looks as if Wesseling had started this hare by a lapsus memoriae. The genitive in Hectoris Andromachen (sic) is better taken as possessive, not as elliptical. Cp. Conington, note ad l. c.

1. 1. οί δὲ κτλ. The material reference is back to Book 4, c. 144: the grammatical to the last sentence of Bk. 4 (ἐκ μέν δή κτλ.). The Persians in Europe are contrasted with the Persians in Libya. The continuity of Bks. 4 and 5 is thus fully established. On the division

2. πρώτους. This passage appears to imply that Perinthos and the Hellespontians had not been previously reduced by Darcios: the priority might, however, be taken to refer to the operations of Megabazos. Byzantion was the base of operation against Thrace and the west: yet the fleet of Dareios bad passed freely through the Hellespont proper, thanks no doubt in part to Miltiades. Cp. c. 2 infra. On the king's route through Thrace, cp. 4. 89 if. and Appendix IV. § 4. Έλλησποντίων here includes all west

Yet the Perinthians 17. ohlyous. offer a stout resistance to the Persian. Rawlinson makes πρότερον long before, vol. iii. p. 211. If this massacre of 'Perinthians' took place before the days of the Greek colonisation it may have facilitated the Greek occupation. Unfortunately Hdt. does not precisely date the event. Perinthes may have been occupied by Samians about n.c. 599. Cp. Smith's Pict. Geogr. sub voc., Buselt, Gr. G. i. 2 470. The Samian connexion may perhaps explain the introduction of the tradition. The distinction be-tween the original Perinthians and the Simian Erockor has been obliterated.

3. 1. μέγιστον. One misses the qualification τῶν ἡμεῖς ιδμεν. Cp. Introduction, p. civ. The area of Thrace was much enlarged for Hdt, by his missing the production of the pr conception of the course of the Danube. Cp. 4, 99. Even so, it is difficult to understand his putting the Thracians

'Ινδούς. Cp. 3. 94, 98.
2. ὑπ' ἐνός, monarchy.

φρονέοι κ.τ., like good republicans (federation).

Monarchy in Hdt.'s opinion might be a good thing-for Thracians. Sitalkes made the attempt in Hdt.'s own day to found a united Thrace, and it was repeated by Byrebistas long after. Cp. 4. 80. Was this passage written before that excursus on Sitalkes?

3. γνώμην την έμην. But not in the opinion of Thucydides, who perhaps knew more about the Thrucians and less about the Scythians than Hdt. It is, indeed, difficult to avoid the inference that Thucydides had the statement of Hdt. in view when he wrote: ταύτη δὲ ἀδύνατα ἐξισούσθαι οἰχ δτι τὰ ἐν τῆ Εἰρώπη ἀλλ' οἰδ' ἐν τῆ ἸΑσία ἔθνος ἔν πρὸς ἔν σὰκ ἔστιν ὅ τι δινατὸν Σκίθαις όμογνωμονούσι πάσιν άντιστήναι, 2. 97, 6. The customs of the Getae have been described 4. 93 supra, and are therefore here omitted.

Those of the Trausi are given c. 4, and those of 'the Thracians beyond Kreston,' c. 5 infra.

On Thrace and the Thracians see Kiepert, Manual, §§ 180 ff., Smith, Pict. Geogr. ii. 1176 ff., Giseke, Thrakisch-pelusyische Stämme der Balkanhalbinsel, Leipzig, 1858. For Greeks, especially Athenians, of the Periklean age, the interest in Thrace and its inclusions was doubtless augmental by inhabitants was doubtless augmented by the fresh settlements there (cp. 9. 75); and mythical or prehistoric links were revived or established (especially in Athenian speculations), cp. Gaertringen, de Graecorum fabulis ad Thraces per-tinentibus (Berlin, 1886).

4. 2. dontal. 4. 93 supra.
4. γινόμενον . γινόμενον. The change of tense should be observed.
5. όλοφύρονται. This 'Trausic view of life as 'not worth living' is by no means uncommon, specially where a higher culture intrudes. Wholesale cases of voluntary extinction by harbarter patrice extinct unless on the Parket. ous nations are not unknown : O. Peschel, The Buess of Man, E.T. p. 151. The pessimistic vein is, however, anything but un-Hellenic, cp. 1. 32, 7. 46. The Sophoklean chorus gives utterance to a similar sentiment O.C. 1225 ff.

μη φίναι τον απαντα νι-κά λόγου το δ' έπει φανή βήναι κείθεν δύεν περ ήκει πολύ δεύτερον ώς τάχιστα.

An incomplete list of life's evils follows: φθόνος, στάσεις, έρις, μάχαι, φύνοι, γήρας. The more humane and optimistic view, which estimates life as a whole, striking a balance twixt good and ill, is embodied in such maxims and anecdotes as those reported of Solon and the Suges, ep. 1, 30, and nearly repre-sents the cheerful common sense of the Hellenes from Achilles (Od. 11, 488) to Aristotle (Eth. Nic. i. 9, 15, 1099b eth åν και πολύκοινον, se. ή εὐδαιμονία).

The old Persians also took a cheerful view of birthdays, 1. 133. (Not so Omar Khayyam, cp. Fitzgerald's translation (1).) On the other hand, few beliefs are so primitive and general as the faith in a better life beyond the grave. See O. Peschel, The Ruces of Man, E.T. p. 258, H. Spencer, Principles of Sociology, Pt. i. cc. xiv. xv., E. B. Tylor, Primitive Culture, ec. xii. xiii., and specially W. R. Alger, History of the Destrine of a Future Luis (New York, 1871) (2nd Ed., Philadelphia, 1883).

Blakesley note 11 remarks that Eurible.

pides (in his Kresphontes) had a parallel to this custom of the Transi, and thinks the poet heard of it "at the Macedonian court." Stein suggests that Euripides got the idea from this passage in Hdt.

- 9. Kpnortwvalwv. By 'Krestonaeane' must be understood the inhabitants of must be understood the inhabitants of Kρηστονική which was a district adjoining Hatorich 7. 124 (cp. 8. 116) between the Axios and the Strymon. What the relation if any between the Kρηστονική γῆ (8. 116) and the Kρηστωνίπολις (1. 57), between Kρηστωνιάται and Κρηστωνιήται, are most points. To change Kreston into Kroton (= Etrurian Cartons) in 1.67 (with Stein) cuts the Cortona) in 1. 57 (with Stein) cuts the knot, in a way not convincing. Perhaps Hdt.'s information is here drawn from sources that avoided ascribing city organisation to the Thracians, or Pelasgi, of Krestonike, ep. πόλις-lêvos e. 2 supra. Hdt. however below e. 7 uses πολίηται carelessly of Thracians.
- 5. 2. πολλάς. One is tempted to think from this that the Krestonacans at least were monogamous.

γίνεται μεγάλη των γυναικών και φίλων σπουδαί ισχυραί περί τοῦδε, ήτις αὐτέων ἐφιλέετο μάλιστα ὑπὸ τοῦ ἀνδρός ἡ δ' ἀν 5 κριθή καὶ τιμηθή, εγκωμιασθείσα ύπό τε ανδρών καὶ γυναικών σφάζεται ές τὸν τάφον ὑπὸ τοῦ οἰκηιοτάτου έωυτης, σφαχθείσα δὲ συνθάπτεται τῷ ἀνδρί. αἱ δὲ ἄλλαι συμφορὴν μεγάλην ποιεύνται· ὄνειδος γάρ σφι τούτο μέγιστον γίνεται.

6. σφάζεται. This sacrifice of the favourite wife is as good a proof of belief in a future life as the practice of the Getae 4, 94, or Seyths, 4, 71. Cp. O. Peschel, Ruces of Man, p. 259. On the wide prevalence of suttee, cp. Westermarck, History of Human Marriage, p. 125. The practices of polygamy and suttee would show that these highlanders had male descent.

6. 1. νόμος. This and the two following chapters exhibit the use of three of the standing anthropological categories of Hdt. -νόμοι, θεοί, ταφαί.

2. τὰς δὲ π. "A great many races of mankind are quite indifferent to juvenile unchastity, and only impose strict conduct on their women after marriage" (O. Peschel, op. c. p. 220). But ep. Westermarck, op. c. ol ff. One advantage of the lσχυρά φυλακή would be that paternity and male kinship might be assertained and peradventure provailed among the Thracians. On magnicus among the Thracians. On marriage by co-emption see O. Peschel, op. c. pp. 227 ff. Stein appropriately quotes Xen. Anab. 7. 2, 38 where the Thracian chief Southes says: sol & & Zeropûr και θυγατέρα δώσω και εί τις sol έστι θυγάτηρ ἀνήσομαι Θρακίφ νόμφ. 4. τας γυναίκας secl. St.

5. εὐγενές. Tattooing was of course an abomination to the Hellene (cp. 7.

233). The barbarian view of the indignity of labour was, however, largely shared by the Greek, who made some exception in favour of agriculture. Cp. 2. 1. Schmidt, Ethik d. alt. Griechen,

7. 2. Ccovs. Halt.'s list of Thracian deities is incomplete (vide Rawlinson) and even misleading. R.'s view that Area, Dionysos, and Artemis represent respectively War, Drinking, and the Chase is fanciful. All three deities were more probably war gods, hellenised by the Greeks in Thrace. Artemis may stand for the Thracian Kotys or Kotytto or for Bendis whose cult was not unknown in Athens itself (Xen. Hell. 2. 4, 11, Plate, Rep. 1. 1). Stein happily refers to 4. 33. Dionysos had an oracle among the Bessi, 7. 111.

In the royal Hermes Rawlinson sees "some mythic inventor of the useful arts." But as the Thracians despised these laborates are the content of the seepised. these labours this conjecture appears unfortunate. Perhaps Hermes stands for a deity invoked by the chieftains in their bargains or treaties (όμνιουσι μοθνον τοθτον) with the Greeks, and represented by them (λέγουσι) as their ancestor. That ancestor-worship was practised is of course not disputed.

4. πολιητίων looks like a lapsus calami, but cp. cc. 5 supra, 15 infra.

The meaning seems to be simply: 'The greatest prizes (given for such things) are awarded, the competitors being matched in pairs. There is no necessary implication that smaller prizes were awarded on a different system: or that the importance of the various 'duels' varied. The contrast implied lies not between the several items in the Thracian dγων, but between the Thracian dγων and Hellenie dywes in which the prizes were slight (δ διδύμενος στέψανος 8. 26), and more than two competitors entered (c. 22 infra). 5. Ecycvos. Steph. Byz. quotes Ktesias as authority for Siguros in Ecypt. Strabo 520 places Ecoron in the Caspian region, and says of them rahka per περσίζουσιν, Ιππαρίοις δε χρώνται μικροίς δυσέσιν ΑΤΑ. The resemblance with this presage is obvious. In the 'Zigeuner' (gipsies) Bl. sees a survival of the Sigyunae. Touching their Medic origin there may have been some confusion on Thracian tribe Macdol (Steph, Byz. sub v.), whom he does not mention. The 'Median' dress (c. 49 infra, cp. 6, 112) may have supported the theory. But cp. Strabo I. c. supra.

The Euction the Adries (cp. Hekataios apud Steph. Byz. sub voc. 'Aspia) are probably so described to distinguish them from the Paphlagonian 'Ereral of tho Hiad 2, 852. Blakesley suggests that the Eneti conducted a traffic between the Adriatic and the Euxine by means of some entrepôt on the Daniele. Cp. 4. 33. We have here again an indication of the Amber route from the Baltic, all the more valuable if this passage be from a different source.

13. σιγύννας . . δόρατα. The last sentence of this chapter is suspiciously like a gloss. Stein defends it. If genuine it is all the more remarkable as the only passage where Hdt, names the greatest of the Phokaian colonies. It is inconceivable, however, that Hdt. should have been ignorant of the existence of Massalia. This passage would also bear out the view that Hdt.'s information here is derived from a western source. It is plainly not from a 'Thracian': see next chapter. Cp, Introduction, p. xeiz.

10. 2. Θρήκες. He returns to eastern sources. The specification of the source here accompanies incredulity, cp. 4, 187. Hdt. might have rationalised the Thracian bees into the sting of cold, as the Scythic feathers into snowflakes 4. 31 supra, but stops short of that. Is it possible that the 'bees' were gnats or mosquitoes!

12. 3. Δαρείον συνήνεικε . . έπιθυ-joar. The words suggest a coincidence rather than a causal relation. Up. êneθύμησε 4. 1. έπιθυμήσαι έντείλασθαι ποιήται is an inelegant sequence. The charming story which follows, cc. 12, 13, seems hardly adequate to account for the fate of the Paionians.

The passage suggests a picture; like some other passages in Hdt.'s work: cp. 4. 88. Had the subject been pictorially treated! Nicolas of Damascus (apud Constantin. Perph. de them. 1. 3, Hist. Gr. min. i. p. 73 ed. Tenh., Müller, Frag. Hist. iii. p. 413) tells the same stery, with trilling variations of a certain with trilling variations, of a certain 'Thrasian' (Mysian) and his wife, Alyattes the Lydian king taking the place of Darrios. Though the citation is bald, it is quite as likely to give the carlier version. "The repetition of such tales is a common feature of ancient legendary history" (R.). For another instance ep. c. 20 infra. A local story has apparently been transferred to Darcies. Possibly the reader betrays a slight misgiving on the part of Hilt.: or a hint that he has touched up the material. Cp. Appendix IV. § 7.

The object of the young men has been ex-pressly stated above, to establish a tyranny in Paionia, supported by the Persians: their action was, however, better calculated to produce the result actually realised. This inconsequence is not involved in the story, as found in Nicolas, and is another reason for condemning the Herodotean version: not but what consistency may be a product of reflection. Such inconsequences, however, are not rare in Herodotus, and betray his constructive methods. Cp. Introduction, § 19.

^{11.} Τευκρών. This would be an argument for the Persian protectorate, as the Persians claimed Asiaties in their own right. Cp. 1. 4. On Teukrian colonies cp. 4. 191. That Troians might have found their way to Thrace, after the destruction of their city, is surely not very improbable. Rawlinson erroneously supposes that the Paionians are here conceived as an off-shoot of the Teukri, before these left their ancient abode in Europe. R's supposition is disproved by 7. 20 which he here quotes in support of his mistake. The Strymon was claimed centuries after as the western frontier of the Persian empire. Cp. letter of Sapor to Constantius A.D. 338. Europe (London, 1890), and the forth-coming Album lacustre du Musée de Lausanne. Whether there were really Lake Dwellings in Lake Prasias, or not, has not been ascertained; and it is at least possible that Hdt. may here have mixed up some description of such remains with a report of such a method of fishing as that described in Rawlinson,

17. 2. os exeporaro. After conquering but before carrying them into Asia.

Cp. e. 23 infra, ad init. The conquest of Paionia was by no means complete or effective. The Paionians lay out of the direct line of advance, and it required a special command from the king to bring about operations against them, c. 14 sup. The direct advance of the Persians is now resumed, and brings them into contact with Maccelonia, the E. frontier of which, at this date, may be placed on the Axios. The invasion of Thrace, with the reduction of the Paionians and other tribes by the Persians, was no doubt a benefit to Macedonian ambition, of which it was not slow to avail itself. Amyntas old in years and affairs sees his opportunity, and pays homage to the Persian king. The story of the patriotism and chivalry of Alexander which follows would be more credible but for the following considerations: (1) his sub-sequent conduct and policy were not of a piece with what is here set down. Not merely does he himself afterwards make terms with the Persian (see c. 21 infra), he also makes, so far as we learn, no effort subsequently to repudiate the Persian supremacy, though opportunity was not wanting, see 6. 44. (2) Similar stories, as Rawlinson remarks, are told of other persons: of Messenians and of other persons: of Messenians and Laconians, by Paussinias 4. 4, 2. Of Athenians and Megaracaus by Polyainos 1. 20, 2 (= Plutarch, Nolon 8). Of Theban exiles and the Polemarchs by Xenophon, Hell. 5. 4, 2-6. Add the banquet scene in Plutarch, Theseus 30, which, however, lacks the Verkleiding; and the story of the Minyae 4. 146 supra, which lacks the hampuet. Of course which lacks the banquet. Of course such things may happen, and may happen more than once; yet the repetition of similar stories tends to discredit. Cp. c. 12 supra. If it be said that there are touches of verisimilitude in Hdt.'s story (e.g. άλγηδόνας δφθαλμών c. 18 infra), it may be answered that such touches are not beyond the art of the good story-teller, and that there are other touches (see c. 18 infra) with a contrary moral. There are, besides, many small omissions and inconsequences in the story; were interpreters employed? How many of the supposed ladies were there, seven or more? How was the massacre of the suite managed? Where is the scene laid? and so forth. (3) If the story were not so easily explained, the motive so obvious! The story is a part of the general glorification of Alexander and Macedon, which is conspicuous in every reference to him in Hdt. Cp. c. 22 infra.

This observation in no way impugns the bona fides of Herodotus, who in such matters was not hypercritical. Stein remarks on the partiality of Hdt. for the Macedonian royal house, and credits the tradition of his residence at the court. (Cp. c. 22 infra airol heyovor airbs τε οΐτω τυγχάνω έπιστάμενος.) Apart from this possibility, it would seem that Athenian observers in the Herodotean age were interested in Macedon, with which the Athenians would fain have been on good terms, and the traditions of the Persian wars in Hdt. are largely an Athenian product. The friendship and fidelity of Alexander to Athens were such a wholesome and suggestive memory in the days of the shifty Perdikkas! Cp. Thucyd. 1. 57.

Grote (viii. 83 ed. 1872) believes the story in Xenophon, although he has this anticipation before his eyes, and although Xenophon admits that there was another account of the affair, afterwards endorsed by Plutarch, which omitted the 'young men in women's attire.' The fabulous character of the Messenian legends preserved by Pausanias make against the story told by him. It resembles the story of the Athenians told by Polyainos (ep. Plutarch, Solon, l. c. supra), and this might be the most genuine of all the traditions. Even in this case the ruse, δονίην ἄνδρας έπτα Πέρσας, οὶ μετ' αὐτὸν ἐκείνον ήσαν δοκιμώτατοι εν τῷ στρατοπέδω. ἐπέμπουτο δὲ οὖτοι παρὰ 'Αμύντην αιτήσοιτες γήν τε και ύδωρ Δαρείω βασιλέι. έστι δε έκ τής 5 Πρασιάδος λίμνης σύντομος κάρτα ές την Μακεδονίην πρώτον μέν γάρ έχεται τής λίμνης το μέταλλον έξ ου υστερον τούτων τάλαντον ἀργυρίου `Αλεξάνδρω ήμέρης έκάστης έφοίτα, μετὰ δέ το μέταλλου Δύσωρου καλεόμενου όρος υπερβάντα είναι έν Μακεδονίη. οι ων Πέρσαι οι πεμφθέντες ούτοι παρά τον 'Αμύντην ως 18 απίκοντο, αίτεον ελθόντες ές όψιν την 'Αμύντεω Δαρείω Βασιλέι γην τε καὶ ύδωρ. ὁ δὲ ταῦτά τε ἐδίδου καί σφεας ἐπὶ ξείνια καλέει, παρασκευασάμενος δε δείπνον μεγαλοπρεπες εδέκετο τούς Πέρσας φιλοφρόνως. ως δὲ ἀπὸ δείπνου ἐγένοντο, διαπίνοντες 5 είπαν οι Πέρσαι τάδε. "ξείνε Μακεδών, ήμιν νόμος έστι τοίσι or the story of the ruse, might have been suggested by something in the ritual at Kolias. But if such a story was alloat at Athens, and connected with Solon, it is not difficult to see in it one source of the story of Alexander and his young men. The new element in the Atheno Macedonian version is the Banquet. (Cp. Plutarch, Theseus, l. c. supra.) Whatever the source or origin of the story, it is hardly credible in the

3. iurá. The number but not the names being given, a particularity which should not be used as an argument for the text of the story. Firer description should not be used as an argument for the truth of the story. Kriger observes that Seven is the holy number of the Persians. Cp. the number of the conspirators against the Magi, 3, 70, 71, a number indubitably authentic, or at least official (Behistun). The large number of envoys, and the fact that they were all true Persians (Il/pras not as in c. 1 authen) and of the highest rank all too supro) and of the highest rank, all go to mark the dignity of the Macedonian court. Apparently only two heralds were sent to Sparta, 7. 134 (anno 491 s.c. cp. 6. 48 infra).

7. Corepov. At this time the district was not yet subject to Macedon: indeed in making Dysoros the eastern frontier of Maccelonia Hdt. is guilty of an ana-chronism. The frentier about 510 B.C. may be left at the Axies, or at most on the east of the Thermaic gulf. Hdt. indeed makes the Axios the boundary between Mygdonia and Bottiaeis (7. 123), and the Lydias and Haliakmon the boundary between Bottiaeis and Makedonis proper (7. 127) in his own day. But these are rather political than ethnical frontiers.

7. Fvyain. Of this marriage there can be no doubt. It was a hard fact, making against the reputation of Alexander as a patriotic Hellene. But in social (c. 19 supra) is justified of all her children. The story of the destruction of the seven noble Persians and their suite was the best apology for the λαβε ὁ ᾿Αλέξανδρος Βουβάρη ἀνδρὶ Πέρση, τῶν διζημένων τοὺς άπολομένους τῷ στρατηγῷ.

marriage. Cp. c. 22 infra. As Alexander, not Amyntas, gives the lady in marriage, the wedding of Gyguea should be dated after Alexander's accession (498 B.C.); χρόνφ οὐ πολλφ (στερον just above cannot therefore be pressed.

This marriage is referred to 8, 136, and there can be little hesitation in identifying Bubares, the husband of Gygaca, with Bubares, son of Megabazos, one of the Epistatai at Athos in 481-0 n.c. 7. 22, the father Megabazos being uone other than the commander in Europe of the passage now before us.
Whether the commission of Bubares at Athos had anything to say to his marriage with the Maccelonian princess, whether the marriage took place much before his appointment, are open questions. The idea that the marriage was part of the consideration for hushing up the murder of the embassy may be a pragmatic fancy, and may be the ground for the chronological statement μετά δε χρόνω ού πολλώ ιστερον.

The vague and clumsy use of κατέλαβε bis (σφεας κατέλαβε, κατέλαβε absolute), followed by καταλαμφθείς (c. 22 θάνατος καταλαμφθείς) seems to betray a bad conscience in the author, or retailer, of this

3. aurol λέγουσι. It was no doubt a family claim, and the family probably invented the story which justified the claim. Cp. 8. 137-9, where the family legend is given. For a case in which Hdt. rejects a family tradition, see c. 57 unfra.

atros. From contact with the family? Cp. c. 17 supra and Introduction, p. civ. There are only two proofs tion, p. civ. below all this verbiage: (1) the 'Argive' legend, (2) the Olympian verdict. The former may have been the ostensible basis of the latter.

4. he rotor onione horours, S. 137-139. Why the story is not told here is not obvious. The most plausible explanation is to be found in the hypothesis that the passage in Bk. 8 was written before the passage in Bk. 5. Cp. Introduction, § 21. It would be interesting to know the exact date of this decision. It may at least be placed before Alexander's accession. Duncker (vii. 100) would put it Ol. 71 = 495 n.c. two years after his accession, but his argument is far from conclusive; and on his own showing Alexander was not merely king, but "at least" 34 years old! nysios, Lysias Or. 33, Diodor. 14, 109, 3 (725).) His 'harbarism' would have been all the more strongly marked, if Macedon was at the time subject, really or nominally, to Persia. The proof of Hellenism no doubt lay in the story given 8.137 ff. But the evidence might not have been admitted if policy had είη Αργείος, εκρίθη τε είναι "Ελλην καὶ άγωνιζόμενος στάδιον 10 συνεξέπιπτε τῷ πρώτω.

11. τῷ πρώτῷ can hardly mean τῷ κκήσαντι, quite apart from the consideration that the word would not designate his competitor more properly than himself. This objection lies against Stein's interpretation which takes ourceeximite to refer to the final decision of the judges. (Stein adds that the imperfect shows that no decision was reached : but the imperfect need not do that necessarily, and the winners' names in the stadion are recorded, and Alexander's is not among them. Cp. G. H. Forster, Die olympischen Sieger, Zwickau, 1891, pp. 10, 11.) It is true that Krysippos the Stoic in his tract on the function of a Judge εποθεμενος δεο δρομεῖς όμου αινεκπίπτειν άλλήλοις naturally asked what was the judge to do in such a case of a dead-heat (Plutarch, Mor. 1045 D). The meaning in this case is as plain as the grammar: not so in the case above. The observation that o mporos can hardly designate either of two coordinates bars the meaning given by Rawlinson: his lot fell out with the first, i.c. it fell to his lot to run in the first heat-if dropl is understood: if adops or some such word, the harshness of the personal subject for explains: "he was drawn to run in the tirst pair." But the foot races at Olympia were not conducted kard Moyor appropriately like contests in Thrace (ep. c. 1, supra). One would like to know whether Alexander ran or not, and with what result. Could the meaning be: what result. Could the meaning be: 'He dropped out of the competition in the first round ' $(3\rho\delta\mu\rho)$ with the others, i.e. he was beaten in the first heat (no wonder, if he was 34 years of age) though he was not the only one beaten. The use of συνεπίπτων elsewhere in Hdt. (1. 206, 8. 49, 123) might be thought to support the rendering of Rawlinson, but for the objections urged : the uses of ἐκπίπτεν will be admitted to render the meaning above suggested plausible (5. 72, 6. 121 et al.).

2. ankero. Without waiting apparently to learn the fate of the embassy to Aigai! The connexion, grammatical and material, of the opening of c. 17 with this passage (ήγοντο . . Μεγάβαζοι δὲ . . Μεγάβαζοι δὲ άγων . .) supports the view that ce. 17-22 are an insertion. Van Herwerden deletes the second anlkero.

4. δωρτήν. Stein brackets after Dobree. Might we not prefer έτεχε δωρεήν μισθόν οι χώρην! For the matter see c. 11 supra.

6. To ποιτύμενον. Not the mere fortification but the whole political design.

The notion that in those days Thraco might be united, Greeks and barbariaus, under an Hellenic monarch (ep. c. 3 supra) and made the seat of an empire, which should be a serious danger to the Persian, looks more like an anachronism (ep. c. 49 infra) than a true prophecy (εδ προορών το μέλλον γίνεσθαι). If Histialos was so clever and so ambitious as Megabazes represents, he might have kept out of the hon's den. Blakesley, who makes Histiaies into a sort of "satrap over all the Ionian cities," thinks that "a man so powerful" only just missed the establishment of an empire which would perhaps have forestalled Alexander. There is a want of balance about this: and the student of Ildt. must allow for the influence of later events and interests on the tradition of earlier stages. The colonisation of Thrace during the Pentekontactia may have affected the memory of earlier adventures in the same region. Duncker of Megalazos grandson of the Conspirator (see 3, 153, 160) may have been Hdt.'s authority for this story. But the whole career of Histinios was richly treated, we may be sure, in Ionian, and specially in Milesian, tradition, and there are no convincing inner indications of a Persian source for this part of the story, though R. suggests that "day and night" is an orientalism.

 Σάρδις. Darcios is still at Sardes on the return of Megabazes. This gives time for Duncker's hypothesis that the events narrated by Hdt., 3, 129-138, should be inserted here, ep. Introduction, p. xxxv.

24. 1. ο Μεγάβαζος εὐπετέως Επειθε Δαρείου. Tradition or afterthought had to explain the transfer of Histinios from Ionia to Susa: the explanation is furnished in these chapters (23, 24). The contrast between the message and the speech of Darcios had they been genuine would have opened the eyes of Histiaies. The μεγάλα πρήγματα of the despatch disappear in the speech. The ancedote is artistic, e.g. the contrast between delip ELLAND devois te kal socies in the mouth of Megabases to Dareies, and deep φlλος συνετός τε και εύνους in the mouth of Dareios to Histiaios. Hdt. has no misgiving in reporting the very words of these intimate interviews, any more than in determining the inmost motives of his dramatis personae.

25. 1. καταστήσας 'Αρταφρένεα . . άπήλαννε. Darcios' departure from Sardes for Susa apparently takes place before the expulsion of Hippias from Athens, or at least before his application at Sardes, c. 96 infra. Dareies may have spent the winter of 512-11 s.c. at Surdes: or his return to Susa may have till the spring of 510 n.c.

Artaphrenes (father of the younger Artaphrenes who accompanied Datis 6. 94) was plainly satrap in Surdes; Oibares son of Megabazos (6, 33) may have been appointed satrap in Daskylcion at the same time. The exact position of Otanes, same time. The exact position of Otanes, and his exact relation to the satraps in Sardes and in Daskyleion, are obscure points. He is here described as στρατηγός τῶν παραθαλασσίων ἀκόρῶν, and in the next chapter as διάδοχος Μεγαβάζω τῆς στρατηγίης. The latter expression probably explains the former, and the mapada disous asopes here are not, as Stein takes it, the emidalization of eving 'Acty of c. 30 infra or the tripa dara-yahya' those which are of the sea' (i.e. the islands, R.) of the Behistun inscription, col. 1, $ 6, nor may we see in his position an exact anticipation of that of the younger Cyrus, Nen. Hell. 1. 4, 3, Anabasis 1. 1, 6 ff 9, 7 ff., with Grote, vol. vi. p. 359; but rather this Otanes may be regarded simply as a military official without any political duties στρατηγιός . . dνδρῶν) in succession to Megabazos, ep. e. 123 infra, though his exact relation to the satraps may not

Blakesley warns against confusing this Otanes, son of Sisamnes, with Otanes, one of the fathers in-law of Darcios, whose father's name is given of Darcios, whose father's name is given in 3. 68 as Pharmaspes, and on the Behistun inscription, col. 4. § 18, as Socris. The name was probably not uncommon, and is interpreted as = civaματος, ep. Rawlinson, vol. iii. 2 p. 548.

26. 3. Βυζαντίους κτλ. If Otanes had to reduce Byzantion, Chalkedon, Antandros and Lamponion, it is obvious that these places had revolted from the Persian after the disaster in Seythia. Ktesias, Fers. § 45 (ed. Gilmore, p. 151), apparently made Darcies burn down the houses and temples of Chalkedon. Polyaines (7. 10, 5) gives an account of a siege and capture of the town by a mine, or tunnel. If the Byzantines were reduced, it may be supposed that their leval despot Ariston (4, 188) warestored. Lemnos and Imbros were new acquisitions for the Persian: not so Lesbos, where Koes was presumably already Tyrant, c. 11 supra.

5. autorious tru vore. As Miltiades subsequently drave the Pelasgi out of Lemnos (6, 140) they only remained in lmbros. Perhaps as Blakesley suggests the mention of the Pelasgi may be meant as some excuse for the action of the Lesbians. Apparently Kees having won a tyrannis for himself in Lesbes assists the Persians to establish a tyrannis, under Lykaretos brother of Maiandries bing of Samos, in Lemnes. The word tyranny is however avoided (Crapxov . . άρχων) for Lykaretos as for his brother. The 'reign' of Maiandrios had been short, ep. 3. 142. Lykaretos had entertained ambition of succeeding him at Samos, 3, 143. If Hdt.'s chronological Samos, 3, 143. If fidt, s chronological indications are correct Aiakes, son of Syloson, was by this time tyrant of Samos (cp. 4, 138, 6, 13). The government had been put into the hands of Syloson (brother of Polykrates) soon after the accession of Darcios, by that Otanes who was one of the Seven (3.

27. 4. τελευτά, probably before the conquest by Miltindes 6. 140.

The text of this chapter is unsatisfactory and in disorder: "locus perversus" Stein. The alrin given in the closing lines plainly refers to the reductions of Byzantion etc. enumerated in c. 26. Cp. Grote, vi. 204 note², 207 n. Schweig, supposes the words of new .. releved to be a later addition, by the author. Blakesley would be content to bracket obror . . τελευτά as such. Cobet supplies μισεόμενος υπό πάντων after τελευτά: sed plura periisse viclentur, van Herwerden.

6. Almostparty and slvos inflicted on the army (cp. 8, 65, 9, 49), doubtless genuine and well-deserved charges, and in so far conflicting with the criticism of the Scythians 4, 142 supra.

μετὰ δὲ οῦ πολλὸν χρόνον ἄνεσις κακῶν ἦν, a celebrated στων (cp. Grote, iii. 491 n.). The MSS. read ἄνεως οτ areos of which no sense can be made.

Whether we adopt areous with de la Barre, Stein, Holder, and the editors generally, or avaréwors (which better ex-plains the corruption, but would require Grote's punctuation) the sense arrived at will be much the same, viz., that after the campaign of Otanes described ce. 26, 27 there was a brief pause or interval of peace and recuperation until fresh trouble fell upon the Greeks in Asia, growing out of the relations of Naxos and Miletos. Rawlinson observes that Grote's proposed punctuation μετά δὲ οὐ πολλὸν χρόνον, ἄνεσις κακῶν ἢε καl gives no sense at all. Can it be that Grote understood ἄνεσις το mean 'a letting loose'? (L. & S. snb v. H.), a sense here inadmissible. (ἄνεσις, καταπαυσις Hesychios.) μετά here is an adverb, though if ἀνανέωσις be read μετά must be taken as a uneventition. must be taken as a preposition.

If the exact material significance of the words on mollow power could be determined, the chronology of the period would become a good deal clearer. Rawlinson even says: "the chronology of Dareios' reign depends almost entirely on what we are to understand by this expression." He approves of Clinton's "two years." But it is no use determining first of all what a purely indeterminate expression means, and then arguing back to the chronological perspective. The result chronological perspective. The result in R.'s case is that he brings down the Scythic expedition to 508 n.c. subsequent to the expulsion of Hippias from Athens. This vague expression must be interpreted in the light of the general chronoπολλου χρόνον άνεσις κακών ήν, καὶ ήρχετο το δεύτερον ἐκ Νάξου τε καὶ Μιλήτου Ἰωσι γίνεσθαι κακά. τοῦτο μὲν γὰρ ή Νάξος εὐδαιμονίη τῶν νήσων προέφερε, τοῦτο δὲ κατὰ τὸν αὐτὸν χρόνον logical perspective: so interpreted it must be taken to stand for more than two years: probably for four or five years. The dρχή κακῶν is the στάσις in Naxos, or rather the application of the Naxian oligarchs to the Milesian despot : the date of which is circa 501 B.c. The operations of Otanes fall a year or two after the return of Dareios to Susa, circa 510 n.c. Cp. Appendix το δεύτερον. More precise than δεύτερα, c. 38 infra. What was the lirst time! Probably the Persian conquest in the time of Kyros (cp. 6. 32), not merely the operations of Otanes above recorded. The Ionians, in Ionia at least, had not been sufferers in the recent campaigns: probably very much the reverse.

3. yap seems to have more than a temporal or narrative force here: the fact of synchronous prosperity is a reason for expecting the mutual origin of disaster, cp. c. 33 infra.

4. eccaucov(p. Naxos had apparently thriven under the despotism of Lygdamis and the patronage of Peisistrates (560-528 n.c.). The despetism of Lyglamis had made way (with or without a helping hand from Sparta, ep. 3. 56, Plutarch, Mor. 850) for a (commercial) oligarchy, probably of the Corinthian type (circa 520 n.e. !). The growth of democracy at Athens, and the establishment of the Kleisthenean constitution (c. 508 B.C., cp. c. 66 infra) may have stimulated the democratic movement in Naxos, culminating in the exile of some of the leading 'men of substance' (c. 30 infra, circa 504-3 n.c.) Tradition represented the Naxians as able in their heyday to put $000 hoplites in the tield, to say nothing of galleys (#loia μακρά πολλά), slaves (rowers, c. 31) and material (χρήματα πολλά c. 31). Naxes, however, suffered from the l'ersians in 490 n.c., 6, 96. Four ships were all they transferred to the national Fleet at Salamis in 480 (8. 46). As tributaries of Athens they paid at most but half the assessment of Paros (ep. C.I.A. i. p. 234). Their (probable) rivals the

Parians rose on the ruips of their

kard rov avrov xpovov. Hdt. here, following probably good authority, perhaps Hekataios, makes the presperity of Miletos synchronise with the pres-perity of Naxos, and particularly with the regime of Histiaios. Later authorities placed the Canagoonparia of Miletos about 750-730 n.c., and her colonies may have been founded in the seventh and eighth centuries. Cp. Rawlinson's note ad l. Miletos has previously figured as a flourishing place in the days of Thrasybulos, Alyattes, and Periandros of Corinth, c. 22 } infra. 1. 20 ff. (c. 600-580 n.c.). In fact there was apparently a revival under Histories of Milesian prosperity, which again coin-cides with a 'despotic' regime, under Persian auspices. How and when Histiaies became tyrant we are left to conjecture. One yeven before the Scythic expedition would bring as back to the treaty with Kyros (546 B.C.), surely a prosperous moment in Milesian annals. A second generation would take us to $80 a.c. about the date of Thrasybulos. The story of the Parian arbitration and constitution in Miletos is very suspicious. Stein quotes Athenacus 524 (se. Herakleides Pont.) to the effect that after the fall of the Neleids a struggle broke out between the Rich, i.c. the Hellenic immigrants, and the Demos, i.e. subject Karians called Péppides. It would be in accordance with analogy if the tyrannis at Miletos marked an upward movement of the Péprules. The tyrannis at Miletos thus appears doubly anti-Hellenic, as Karian and as Persian, but the first tyrannis was at least a bulwark against Lydia (1. 20 ff.). The two generations of ordors may be the period intervening between the tyranny of Thrasybulos and the tyranny of Histiaios, but if so the mediation of the Parians can hardly be placed at its latter end, or must be regarded as singularly unsuccessful. A friendship between Paros and Miletes would not tend to the presperity of Naxes, but might be thereby explicable. 29 είλοντο οι Μιλήσιοι, κατήλλαξαν δέ σφεας ώδε Πάριοι. ώς απίκουτο αὐτῶν ἄνδρες οἱ ἄριστοι ἐς τὴν Μίλητον, ῶρων γὰρ δή σφεας δεινώς οἰκοφθορημένους, έφασαν αὐτών βούλεσθαι διεξελθείν την χώρην ποιεύντες δε ταύτα και διεξιόντες πάσαν την

The term officially employed at Halikarnassos, Miletos, and in Ionia generally, would probably have been dyapd. Cp. 6, 11, and note on names in c. 30 intra (inx)sola in Xen. Helt. 1. 6. 8 would not disprove it). Is it too much to suggest that Hdt, may have come by this phrase in the west! The Sybarites might have traditions con-

10. of no. It may be inferred that the constitution drawn by the Parians was too good to last. Hdt. has here, in his way, brought in a good story which has no obvious bearing on the situation. What needs to be explained is how the Naxian oligarchs found Mileter under a description. found Miletos under a despotism. That at some time or other Parian καταρτιστήρες were called in at Miletos is probable enough. The practice of Arbitration whether between (a) parties in a city or (b) city and city was largely resorted to by the Greeks. It is a kind of jurisdiction, an alternative to force and diplomacy. For examples of (a) beside the case of Miletos in the text, cp. 4, 161. As examples of (b) cp. 5, 95, 6, 108, 7, 144, Such precedents might have their use for Athens. Cp. Thuc. 1. 115. 30. 1. τότε δε goes back to τότε ακαάσασα c. 23, all that follows προσχημα being probably a digression, not found in Hekataios, or in Hdt.'s authorities for the story of the Ionian Revolt. The sentence somewhat clumsily resumes the narrative broken by the digression.

2. 'Ιωνίη more restricted than 'Ιωσι
c. 23 supra, and used here probably in a strictly geographical sense. In this sense it is contrasted with Kypros c. 109 infra, with Sicily 6. 22, with Peloponnesos 6. 96, with the Hellespont 8. 100. Naxes is 'near' or 'off' it c. 31 infra, 'Aiolis' is 'next' it c. 123 infra, Teos is in its midst 1. 170. Men can sail to it c. 115 infra, march to it 1. 162, be in it 1. 170, leave it 1. 163. That he is no admirer of the Ionians is shown by the following passage, 1, 143. The lonians form the weakest branch of the Hellenic stock; the Athenians and everyone else are ashamed of the name except the twelve cities, who glery in their shame, 1, 148. Kleisthenes of Athens set them at neight 5, 69. Kyros made no account of them 1, 158. Kambyses regarded them as slaves 2. 1. The Seythians, utter barbarians, gave them the unkindest cut of all 4. 142. Their bad qualities are conspicu-ous at Lade 6, 11, 12, 13. Hdt. combats the geography of their wise men 2, 16, 4. 36, makes fun of their diaira 4. 95, truces the father of lonian philosophy to the abhorred Phoenician stock 1.74, and seems to think little of their great and seems to think little of their growlights (3, 95, 96; cp. 2, 123) though he has perhaps more kindness for the Samian than for the Milesian school, 3, 60. Cp. Introduction, p. lxvi.

5. 'Aptorayópas. The names of the dynastic clique are noticeable. Histimosis is son of Lysagoras, Aristagoras, his can have and saninclay is the son of nephew and son-in-law, is the son of Molyagoras, and perhaps latrogoras mentioned e. 37 w/ra was, as Stein suggests, a relation. The names have a popular ring: cp. 6, 11 and e. 29

Aristageras is here mentioned for the first time, but that Histiaios, 'Tyrant of Miletos,' should be introduced again as though he had not alterdy played an important rôle in Hdt.'s narrative, looks a little as though we were here on the trace of an originally independent source, or story. 8. Envo. So the tyrant of Athens finds friends at Sparta, cc. 63, 90 infra; in 431 a.c. Evatches tyrant of Astakos is restored by the Corinthians, Thue, 2. 33. However unnatural the friendship between oligarchy and tyrannis (cp. the story of Gelon 7, 195) special circumstances might lead to a community of interests between these natural opposites. In this case the friendship of the Milesian oligarchs with

15. πυνθάνομαι. There would have been no use in exaggerating the power of the Naxians to the exiles, who could have put him right immediately, but whether the whole 5000 shields stand for free men of Naxos may be doubted. 8000 is the reported number of Spartiatae 7, 234 in 480 n.c.

19. ὑμῖν, 'you know.'

Whatever the meaning of emilandooioi there must be an exaggeration here, in Two er Ty 'Asin maurwo. In regard to the former word, the question arises whether the position of Artaphrenes as here described is reconcilable with the position of Otanes described c. 25 supra as στρατηγός The mapadalasolwe desper, assuming the παραθαλάσσιοι there to be the same as the emedaldagood here. Yes, on any one of these hypotheses: (1) Otanes' command might now be over. See тозайта &eργάσατο στρατηγήσας c. 28 supra: but how reconcile this with c. 123 infra? (2) The Strategos was subordinate to the Satrap, at least in this case. (3) ènedaλάσσιοι = on the Aegean, παραθαλάσσιοι = on the Hellespont. That distinction may be materially correct, but the words can hardly have such a technical meaning. (4) Aristagoras was deliberately exaggerating or dramatically represented as deliberately exaggerating. But as above explained, note c. 25, if we understand (Manes as successor to Megabazos in command of an army on the coast (of παραθ. Δεδρες) there is no need for an harmonistic attempt to reconcile this and that passage, though of course there is stress to be laid on the difference of the prepositions, and this passage remains an exaggeration of the satrap's authority, which probably extended only over the first 'nome' as described in 3. 90.

Ho does not give the circuit of Euboia, but estimates its greatest length at 1200 stades and its greatest breadth at 150 (p. 444). For modern estimates and literature, cp. τριήρεας. The 200 triremes were presumably levied from the Greeks. The number of the Greek fleet at Lade was 353, 6. 8, and from the list there given it is obvious that Miletos, Samos, Chios and Lesbos might easily have supplied the whole number on this occasion. That the levy was more general is however shown by the aneedote which follows in c. 33.

6. στρατηγόν τούτων. Otanes has nothing to say to the expedition. The exact authority of Megabates is in the story represented as ill-defined—Hinc illae lacrymae.

7. Havoavins. In this interesting reference we have another question in debate between Hdt, and Thucydides. Cp. Thuc. 1, 128. The chief points of difference are two: (1) The story in Hdt. represents l'ausanias as a suitor for the daughter of Megabates. Thucydides represents the lady in question as a daughter of Xerxes; in Thue, Megabates does indeed figure, as satrap of Phrygia, while Pausanias was at Byzantion, and is by Xerxes removed and replaced by Artabazes, in order that negotiations may be the better conducted. This looks remarkably like a Thucydidean correction of the tradition preserved to irrefutable evidence of Pausanias' own correspondence. Hdt. has here perhaps simply oral tradition to rely on, and he is undoubtedly tender of the fame of Pausanias. Cp. 9, 64. But had Thucydides really genuine documents?

9. ὑστέρφ χρόνφ τούτων. A vague and almost superfluous chronological indication if by ταῦτα be understood simply the Naxisn atlair. The age of Megabates makes it perhaps additionally unlikely that it was his daughter whom Pausanias sought in marriage. But such

τρωτα. Pausanias' love was not for the lady but for the throne. There is humour in this, cp. 6. 129. Was της Έλλάδος τύραννος. A remarkable expression. The political unity of Hellas could only have been realised under a monarchy, and only at Sporta could a Pauhellenic monarchy have been established. But it would have been established, like the Roman principate afterwards, upon the ruins of the republican oligarchy. Upon a small seale the problem of empire was more than once presented to Sparta, as on a larger to Rome. Sparta clung to her domestic institutions, and forewent a Panhellenic unity. Rome accepted the imperial destiny, and discovered too late that it involved the tyrannis. (Cp. c. 3 supra.) On 'Hellas' cp. e. 49 infra.

6. περιιόντος. Megabates appears an active commander bent upon the success of his mission.

7. MvvSins. Myndos, not men-tioned elsewhere by Helt., was situated near Halikarnasses, and, like the latter, a colony from Treezen (Pausan, 2, 30, 8), though not a member of the Dorian Hexapoles (1, 144) but to be included in the mpdsouxor there reterred to,

Skylax though merely the doxwo of a single Myndian trireme must have been a considerable person, if he was really on terms of ξα iη with Aristagoras. Skylax appears to be a local (Karian) name. (p. 1-41.

Test. iii. 4 p. 125. Three stages are indicated in the feeling of Megabates (i) δεσών τι ποιησάμενος . . (ii) κύρτα δευών έποιθματο καὶ ἐυπέρχετο . . (iii) θιμωθείς. It can hardly be said that his action in the first two stages was surprising or culpable. In the third stage, however, this Persian Grandee, of the blood of the Achaemenids, com-mander-in-chief of the expedition, stultifies his commission, betrays the king's interest, ruins a project which had the king's own express sanction. disappoints the satrap of Sardes, and prepares a discredit for himself, in order to gratify a passionate pique with the vice-governor of a single threek city, who was insolent. Is this likely? Cp. Duncker, Gesch. des A. vii. p. 34 (1882). If the act of treachery hel been put down to Skylax, or to Atistagoras, it would have so med more credible. Perhaps the Greek tradition preferred to assign the failure to the foreign foe. It is to be remembered that this traiter Megabates is in high favour afterwards (e. 32 supra), although this story of his treachery was presumably notorious-if true.

^{3.} Kańkara is placed by Kiepert's Atlas on the S.E. of Chios, looking towards the mainland: presumably on the strength of this passage.

34. 2. où8év. Krûger adds 71 which v. erwerden admits. The Navians are Herwerden admits. The Navians are represented as little better than simpletons, paying no heed to the intrigues of their exiled fellow-citizens abroad, suspecting nothing of the two hundred triremes at Miletos, taking no thought of the fate of Samos, Chios, Lesbos, Lemnos; yet able withal on the shortest notice to make all things ready for a siege,

These improbabilities are necessary to the story of Megabates' treachery.

5. ἐσάξαντο from σάττεσθαι. Schweig. reads ποτά τὸ τείχος ἐσάξαντο i.e. ἐς τὸ τ. άξαντο. Herwerden adopts ἐψράξαντο from Hoger.

8. μηνας τέσσερας would carry them over most of the summer; looks like a genuine memory, but does not make the improvisation of the Naxians more probable, nor consequently, the story of the treachery of Megabates.

10. προσαναισίμωτο πολλά. Aristagoras being genuinely in earnest in the undertaking, the failure of which Megabates had secured beforehand! On what terms the two were with each other during the four months' siege, it would be interesting to know,

35. 1. την υπόσχεσιν, c. 31 supra. The only actual promise Aristagoras made to Artaphrenes was to find supplies. The suggestion seemed to be that Artaphrenes should himself undertake the annexation.

4. Μεγαβάτη διαβεβλημένος. We are left to suppose that the treachery of Megabates was not discovered till long afterwards, and even then not reported to the Persian court, otherwise he could hardly have been satrap of Daskyleion in 476 s.c., cp. c. 32 supra.

There are almost too many (five) good reasons here! Probably the message of Histiaios would have been enough to account for the revelt. This indeed was the view taken by Artaphrenes, who exonerated Aristagoras, 6. 1.

6. 70v torryptvov referred to apparently a notorious personage, like "the man in the iron mask," etc. There seems truth in the tale.

11. forise, with his own hand? probably. The letters were not branded but tattooed (to nev lotly day ath. c. 6 supra). Histiaios may have learnt the art in Thrace. Aulus Gellius who tells the story (17. 9 od jin.) with some (worthless) variations, from a different source, seems to imagine that the communication was a lengthy one. Demarates was credited with a different method of sending a dangerous message 7. 239 (ep. e. 92 infra).

16. ἀπόστασιν. Perhaps this single word was all that was on the man's skin.

However Polyainos 1. 24 knows better, Τσταίου 'Αρωταγόρα' 'Ιωνίαν ἀπύστησον.

15. πολλάς ἀχε (λπίδας, c. 30 supra.

The Nostalgy of Greek exiles is most fully exemplified in the stery of Demokedes, 3. 129 ff. The case of Histiaios was not one of simple home-sickness: better to reign in Miletos than serve in Susa.

36. 2. πάντα ταῦτα. The five sufficient reasons commerated c. 35 supra.
5. ὁ λογοποιός. Cp. c. 125 infra, 6. 137, and Introduction, p. lxvii. Heka-taios is one of the tyrant's partisans. This circumstance would not recommend him to Hdt., nor yet his sacrilegious advice infra. Perhaps Hdt. (pace his own recorded experience) did not approve of historians meddling with politics.

7. καταλέγων. Was this catalogue by Hekatsios not committed to writing, included in any of his works known to Hdt. and used by him, e.g. in 3. 90 ff., 7. 61 ff. et al. ! ep. 4. 87.

7. 61 ff. et al.! ep. 4. 87.
Hekataiss the prose-wright is at first in despair and then full of hope, his hopes being bound up with a counsel of despair, if not of impiety. However, he had reason, for the historic offerings at Branchidae apparently suffered the fate he prophesied, ep. 6. 19. Hence the rather by just below.

30, 35 supra. 16. ἐν τῷ πρώτῳ τῶν λόγων, 1. 92. A remarkable expression, the authenti-city of which there is little reason to question. Had the words been a gloss, the reference would probably have been still more explicit. ὁ πρώτος τῶν λόγων can searcely be identified with the whole of Isk. 1 (notwithstanding the use of 6 Myos in 1. 95), but may be taken to cover cc. 1-94, or the first of the two divisions into which Bk. 1 clearly falls. άν τοις Αυθίσισι Μόγοισι would have been an expression more in accord with Herodotean phraseology, ep. 1, 184, 2, 161. The employment of the ordinal number here is, however, specially in-teresting in its bearing on the question of the Composition of Holt.'s work. See

Num. p. 528, who mentions that "Mylasa was originally the residence of the dynasts of Cari contil they obtained possession of the Greek town of Halikarnasses." Ramsay, op. c p. 422, makes it the seat of a bishopric in Roman times (but ep. pp. 416, 417).—Histories was released, and must have been subsequently restored, cp. 7, 93, and apparently succeeded by a son named Tymnes. (Ramsay, p. 421).—Koos, 4. 97 and c. 11 sapra, is a Lesbian (Acolian).—Aristoparas son of Herakleides of Kyme, 4. 138, likewise an Acolian.

The short list of tyrants arrested at Myus by latragoras, under orders from Aristagoras of Miletos, is not a little remarkable. It includes only four names. Two of these are apparently native Karian, or Helleno - Karian dynasts: two are Aedian tyrants. No Ionian tyrant is mentioned. The anonymous diller sexuel remain anonymous to the end of the story.

7. Ισονομίην. So Miletes follows suit to Naxos, as Naxos to Athens, c. 30 supra. The repairly was identified with 'medism' in the Ionian cities at this time. Cp. 4, 137.

5. στρατηγούς. The precedent of Athens (c. 69 infra) may have been followed. However that may be, Strategi were wanted for the coming struggle with the Persians. The old title for the chief magistrate in the Ionian cities was perhaps πρέτανις, as at Miletos (Aristot. as guardians of the Spartan Institutions. The extinction of one of the kingships might have led to the aggrandisement of the other. The Liphors would no doubt have been equally solicitous for the House of Prokles. Dual Royalty was a double safeguard against tyranny. Cp. Aristot. Pol. 2. 9, 30, 1271. On the kingships ep. 6. 51 ff. If, however, Kleomenes was on the throne in Sparta in 519 n.c. (Duncker, vi. 5 550) and if the king's minority extended to the age of 30, he must have been born about 550 n.c. or earlier. ol τής . οικήτοι. Family interests and connexions counted for a good deal in Sparta, cp. 4, 149.

S. of thopon A fresh evidence of the care for the royal family entertained by the Ephors: not the same men of course as those alluded to cc. 39, 40.

9. τσχει, concipit.
10. of δt . . λέγουσι. Hdt. would hardly have mentioned this view, if he thought there was nothing in it. His authorities then were good: perhaps Spartan. Conversely, Spartan tradition was not clear upon this point. Hdt. however seems to prefer the view put first, perhaps as better according with the succession of Leonidas.

12. τὸ δεύτερον . τὸ δεύτερον. The awkwardness of this repetition is not greatly diminished by bracketing with Stein the first τό, though the grammar is improved; and δεύτερον ἐπελθοῦσα is tautologous. Holder follows Bottieler u bracketing και το δεύτερον έπελθοίσα. On δεύτερον cp. δεύτερα c. 33, τὸ δεύτερον c. 28. The difference made by the article is well shown in this passage, rection in characteristics applying to a single set by a different person: τὸ δεύτερον ετικτε to a repeated act by the same person. (Cobet brackets γυνή also.)

13. Δημαρμένου. Stein suggests that this Demarmenos was son of the famous Chilon, 1. 59, 6. 65. Blakesley suggests that the mother of Kleomenes was of Achaian not of Herakleid blood: "By his father's side Kleomenes was pure Derian," and quotes the pedigree 7. 201. But Achaisn and Herakleid are not opposed to each other. On the contrary, if Kleomenes had claims to Achaian descent (c. 72 infra) it was in Achana descent (c. 72 tofra) it was in virtue of his being an Herakleid.

42. 1. 45 Aéyerau. At Sparta? at Delphi? in the west? or by the family of Demaratos? (Cp. Xen. Hell. 3. 1, 6, Anab. 7. 8, 17, Pausan. 3. 7, 7.) Was Helt. the first to commit the Story of

ην τε ου φρενήρης άκρομανής τε. The position of the τε is remarkable, ofoperapas conlesce into a single positive idea. One might have expected the statement to run that Kleomenes, who had never been quite 'right' (ob-opertons) went at last utterly mad (ἀκρομανής).

On his madness, see 6, 76.

2. Δωριεύς. The name is certainly significant, and its associations perhaps added point to the pun of Kleomenes, c.

Hdt. seems to use the terms Λακεδαιμόνιοι and Σπαρτίβται as equivalent. Cp. G. Gilbert, Gr. Staatsa. i. 241, where, however, the statement that in Thuc. 1. 128-134 we find an exception to the strict use of the later historians appears to me incorrect. τῷ νόμφ. If the φάτα 7. 3 is to be trusted this rouss was not unqualified. The description of the merit and the mind of Dorieus seems to imply that the claim of primogeniture might have been set aside, at least in the case of imbeelity or insanity.

7. Σπαρτιήτας. Not in apposition to λεών but acc. after airήτας (airεῦν τινά τι common). The Uikiste may all have been Iderians or at least leading citizens c. 46 in/ra, though citizens could ill be spared from Sparta in any great number. Cp. the restrictions on άποδημία. Harpocration: και γὰρ τὰ μηθένα τῶν μαχίμων ἀνεν τῆς τῶν ἀρχόντων γνώμης ἀποδημείν, κτλ. V. Rose, Aristel. Frag. 2513.
3. ἐν Δαλφόσοι. This bad example was, we may suspect, well remembered in Delphi together with the failure of Dorieus. The claim here advanced on behalf of Delphi has sometimes been exaggerated into an historical record been Dorians or at least leading citizens exaggerated into an historical record (e.g. "almost all Greek colonies were founded with the sanction and frequently by the express command of the Pythian Apollo " Diet. Geogr. i. 726). Cicero's question is better: quam vero Graccia coloniam misit in Acoliam Ioniam Asiam Siciliam Italiam sine Pythio aut Dodonaco aut Hammonis oraculo ! de Divin. 1. 1, 3.

9. τῶν νομιζομένων. The conduct reported of Donious hardly bears out the praise bestowed upon him. To set religion and law at defiance is hardly good evidence of virtue and wisdom. Had Delphi, as well as Spattan κόμος, already decided against him?

10. Λιβύην. He knew apparently what he was about, had a definite good, and chose his guides wisely, ep. 4. 150 ff. That he omitted to obtain Delphic approval of a mission to Libva is the approval of a mission to Libya is the more remarkable considering the relations between Delphi and Kyrene (4, 1. c. supra). Perhaps Delphi would have urged a site too far west, cp. 4, 178. 11. χώρον κάλλιστον τών Λιβύων παρά Κίνυπα, 4. 175, 198. He was not seer is represented as the author of this far-reaching argument. Herakles was at home in Bocotia (c. 59 infra, 6, 53), Herakles was but to have admitted that (Spartan) Herakleids were entitled to all the ettlements of Herakles would have involved an ecumenical γης dracaσμός. 6. αιρήσειν. He does not ask this time either, is here a yhe krisee in. It was not apollo, it was the Oidipodeian seer that sent him to Sicily. The Pythia responds in the indicative not in the imperative. The ironic prophecy is fulfilled: Dorieus obtained the place to which he was going, verily his own place. Freeman's misgivings (Secily, ii. 37 m.) are beside the point.

2. &s λίγουσι Συβαρίται. We are here plainly notified of the source of this part of the story; and though it does not follow that Hdt, himself had the story by word of mouth from men of Sybaris, and from men of Kroton, much less that he forgathered with them in their proper homes (see Introduction, pp. Ixxvii f.), still the presumption created by the tone and style of the passage is in favour of some such hypothesis. The 'Sybaritae' here named can only be the remnant or posterity of the inhabitants of the old Sybaris, who occupied Laos and Skidros 510-453 R.C. (6. 21) till they were transferred or restored to 'Sybaris' 453-448 s.c., and afterwards to Thurii (by the Athenians) c. 443 s.c. Cp. B. Head, Hist. Num.

3. Int. For the full story, Diodor. 12.
9. Duncker vi. 5 630 ff., Lenoumant, La Grande-Gree, i. 203 ff. As they are here called 'Sybaritae' it might be argued that this passage was first written down either during the six years 453-418 b.c., or after their expulsion from Thurii. But the remnant of 'Sybaritae' seems to have held so closely together all along that the historian might have described that the instorial might have described them as Sybaritae even when inhabitants of Thurii. The Sybarites and their king Telys are represented as the aggressors, and the men of Kroton anterified (περιδεέας). The value of a Spartan was not to be reckened by the numbers he brought with him, as the notorious cases of Salaithes, Brasidas, Gylippos, et al. afterwards showed. Elis was a home of mantic, ep. 9, 33 and 37, and the lamidae were the greatest of

37, and the lamidae were the greatest of the mantic families: πολέκλειτον καθ' Ελλανας γένος Ιαμοδάν Ρίπελ, Ol. 6, 71. 10. τυράννου. The Sybarites used the more complimentary term βασιλείς. 45. 1. μαρτύρια. Duncker (vi. 6 611) decides emphatically for the Sybarite contention, Freeman (Sisily, ii. 91) inclines in the same direction; but is it so clear that the Sybarites, when it came to evidence, have the best of the argument? (1) They asserted that Dorieus founded the temple and precinct on the Krathis to Athene Krathia, but perhaps the assertion was not true (Μέγουσι, ep. 4. 187). Even if that assertion was true, it did not prove that Dorieus lad joined in the destruction of Sybaris. (2) Still less did the premature death of Dorieus (μαργέριον μέγιστον) prove their point. (3) The onus probandi lay with the Sybarites. (4) The motive for ascribing the destruction of Sybaris to Dorieus rather than to the men of Kroton is obvious. (5) The argument of the Krotoniates though not absolutely final is no sophism. If a man of the Herakleid stock of Sparta had lent them his aid, he would have claimed and obtained his reward. It might be said that the temple dedicated to Athene was out of his share of the spoil. But the connexion of Dorieus with Athene, or with this temple, was not established. Moreover (6) what of Philip of Kroton? (c. 47 infra) who would likewise have had his reward. It is, however, obvious that Fldt. attaches considerable weight to the Sybarite argument. Probably the μίγμστον μαργέγιον outweighs all others with him, as it carries a divine moral with it. A 'παράπρηξις' must be discovered to account for the failure and fate of Doricus; not that Delphi would have admitted a non-fulfilment of prophacy in the case. Doricus did indeed obtain έπ' ἡν ἐστέλλετο χώρην. Cp. c. 43 supra. Hdt. himself may have wished to side with the Sybarites, his townsmen, but he cannot bring himself to force the argument.

The word carries with it, perhaps, a suggestion of official authority or sanction, and is used here, not unintentionally, of the arrival of the leaders at their proper destination.

4. Φοινίκων και 'Εγεσταίων. The 'Phoenicians' would be men of Carthage (cp. c. 42 supra), or of the Carthagenian settlements in Sicily, which might of course cover older colonies from Phoenicia proper. Egesta was a non-Hellenic city, a city of the Elymi people of

Supposed Troison origin. (Cp. Freeman, Sirily, i. 200 ff., Thuc. 6. 2.)
6. Μινώην τ. Σ. ἀπ. "The town at the mouth of the Halykos" (Freeman). Presumably 'Phoenician' before it passed into Hellenic hands; perhaps only acquired for Selinus by Enryleon.

Cp. Freeman, Sicily, ii. p. 96.
7. Παθαγόρεω. The name must not be confounded with Pythagoras. 'Monarch' = tyrant. There is some point in his death at the alter of Zens ayogaios, but Helt. has no consequent dyos to record.

9. the oliver, 'but not for long.'
This story of Western adventure is presumably from Sikeliote sources, but contains no evidence that Hdt, had ever actually set foot in Sicily, 47. 1. και συναπθανε. Dorieus clearly tost his life. Cp. 7. 158, 205.

2. άρμοσάμενος. Ср. ήρμόσατο с. 32

4. 4. 8 Κυρήνην. The connexion or route between Magna Graccia and Kyrene is significant (Thue. 7. 50, 2). Cp. Introduction, pp. xevii ff. It was presumable to the connexion of ably in Libya that Philippos made acquaintance with Dorieus, c. 42 supra, and he may have had something to say to the subsequent direction of Dorieus' movements. 5. οίκηίη. The στόλος of Dorieus was provided at the public expense. Cp. ec. 42, 43, 46 supra.

8. Ιλάσκονται. This Hero-worship of an Hellenic shade at Egesta (Segesta) is doubly remarkable, for (1) he has been fighting against the Segestaeans, and (2) they were not Greeks. The case of Onesilos in Amathus in Kypros c. 114 infra is similar. Stein remarks that it cannot have been his beauty for which Philippos was worshipped; but why not! Freeman (Sicily, ii. 95) compares the effect of the personal appearance of the Rhodian Doricus upon the Athenians, Xen. Hell. 1. 5, 19, but considers the Segestaean tribute to Philip higher "as paid to a dead man," and "more distinctly a tribute to beauty as such." The tribute of worship was properly paid to dead men: it would have been a still higher tribute to have worshipped him alive (cp. 7. 56). Prof. Freeman makes the pregnant remark that "it must have been when they came to strip the slain, that the men of Segesta " were overcome by the majestic form, noble even in death, of the victor of Olympia." However, they might, perhaps, have seen him alive in the battle. Op the case of Leon, 7, 180. (In regard to the proper name of the city, Segesta is the more correct, but both are found on coins, cp. B. Head, Historia, pp. 144 ff. The MSS, here vary between executator and algerraiwr.)

48. 1. Δωριεύς . . ετελεύτησε. The Story of Darious (cc. 42-48) looks like an episode, and insertion, based by no means in the main upon local Spartan authorities or sources. The 'Sybarite' and 'Krotoniate' authorities are, indeed, nominated in general terms: the finale (ce. 46, 47) has a strong 'Sicilian' colour : the first colonial adventure (ec. 42, 43) might have been recorded at Delphi: for the Spartan situation Hdt. might have been indebted to Spartan sources, either on the spot, or emigrant. (See c. 42 supra.) But few writers were in a position to combine or to contagminate these various sources as Hdt. has done: and the result can hardly have been accomplished before his settlement at Thurii. Of the general truth of the story there need be no doubt: and true or transfigured, its significance is not small. The desultory efforts to make way against the barbarian in Libya and the west: the rivalries and mutual destruction of Hellenie states: the canker (ep. c. 28 supra) of internal ordous: the arcers open to the military or political adventurer: the position and influence of Delphi: the character and spread of Hellenic art, religion, ethics: all those, and other points, are illuminated by this well-told story, which ranks with the tale of Demokedes (3, 131 ff.) in historic interest, if not in artistic finish. Cp. further, Appendix VII. § 4.

3. ov.. twa mollow xpóvov. A very remarkable observation, for Kleomenes must be taken to have been king about 30 years or so, on Hdt.'s own showing: ep. 3. 148, 6. 73. The former passage finds him on the throne about 516 n.c. (ep. Duncker, vi. 500 n.). The latter reference keeps him on the throne till the eve of the battle of Marathon, nearly 20 years after the death of Dorieus; and the exile, restoration and death of Kleomenes have still to take place. The moral argument has proved too much for Hdt.'s chronology. Still the fact remains that Kleomenes was succeeded by his brether Leonidas. If Dorieus had remained in Sparta and survived Kleomenes, he would presumably have been king, and perhaps have wedded Gorgo. He was, however, married in Sparta, for he left there a sen Euryanax (9, 10), who had apparently no right to the throne against Leonidas. Cp. c. 42 supra. On the chronology of Kleomenes' reign, cp. Appendix VII. § 3.

4. & mass. The Ephors had not

4. Amass. The Ephors had not tried to secure him male issue, as the succession was provided for in the persons of his brothers, cp. c. 39 supro. Gorgo became the wife of her uncle τύραννος. Aristagoras is incorrectly and inconsistently here described, for (1) he was only vicegerent of the tyranny c. 26 supra, (2) he had laid down the tyranny c. 37. But the story of Aristagoras' visit to Sparta comes perhaps from Spartan sources, in which he may have been so described. The λόγω in

c. 37 is probably harmonistic.

2. apxiv, sc. riv Basilviuv (cp. 6. 106). The way his colleague is ignored is remarkable. Demarates was still in possession of the second kingship. The date is very vague, but arguing back from the date of the capture of Miletos (6. 18) and supposing Aristagoras to have visited Sparta (and Athens) in the winter before the first campaign, his visit would fall at the earliest into the winter of 500-409 g.c. or at latest, the winter of 499-8 g.c. Cp. Appendix V.

os Aaredaupovio kéyever. The phrase seems to carry 'Lakedaemonian' authority for the whole account of Aristagoras' visit to Sparta, i.e. (1) the exhibition of the pinax, (2) the interview, or interviews, with the Eurysthenid (Agidaking, (3) the speech and arguments of Aristagoras. But the historian's art must also be reckoned with. The dialect is certainly his: but is that all the Cp. Appendix VII. 8 8.

Anaxim indres (Strabe 7, Meineke i. p. s) and exhibited the great Ionian scheme of geography, which Hdt. so heartily despised, 4. 36. (Cp. Introduction, p. lxvi.) It does not appear certain that Hdt. had himself seen this map, or pinax, nor do we know its subsequent history. Groto observes (iii. 497) that it evidently made a profound impression at Sparta. Its construction marks an epoch in Greek geography (see Bunbury, History of Anc. Geography, i. 145, and more particularly Hugo Berger, Geochichte der wissenschaftlichen Erdkunde der Griechen, Erste Abtheilung, pp. 1 ff.). If, however, Anaximandros was born 611 n.c. (Ueberweg, i. 34), and Aristagoras really brought a map of Anaximandros to Sparts, the map can hardly have been up to date. Agathemeros, 1. 1 (Geogr. mer. ii. p. 471), appears to say that Hekataios made some much admired improvements on the map of Anaximandros, and it has frequently been suggested that the tabula displayed by Aristagoras was the work of Hekataios. Cp. Forbiger, Handb. d. alt. Geogr. i. 58. But the map of Hekataios was a γράμμα, not a πιναξ. Straba 7.

5. ἀπικνιόμενος. Aristagoras, despot of Miletos, is represented as interviewing Kleomenes, king of Sparta, as though the latter could act in and for Sparta on equal terms with him. There is a latent reason for this; see Appendix VII. § 8.
τάδε. How the exact words, or arguments, which passed at a presumably secret interview, were divulged, it is not Hdt.'s way to state: cp. 4. 137 et al. Aristogoras, however, repeated himself at Athens, c. 97 infra, and see c. 51.

The plural would not be inadmissible in a private appeal to the king, but both the grammar and the argument, addressed to the Sportan sense

δτφ προίστατε της Έλλάδος. The Spartan προστασία had been formally recognised, perhaps for the first time, about the middle of the sixth century n.c., by Kreises 1. 69, on account of their power, δυνατωτάτοις, c. 56, and prominence, προέχουτας c. 36. Since them the chain had been made and then, the claim had been again and again endersed and acted on: by the Ionians and Aiolians (1, 141, 152), by Samians (3, 46, 148), by Athenians (6, 63), by Boe dians (6, 108), to say nothing of Scythians (6, 84). The argument is strictly appropriate to the time and place, though in lidt's own day it might have counted—in some places—as authorsted. as antiquated.

10. πρὸς ἐτῶν τῶν Ἑλληνίων contains a fresh argument, and further illustration of the unity of Hellas, such as it was. Cp. e. 92 infra ad fin. Zeis ανδρας δμαίμονας contains a third gument. The assertion of a relationargument. ship, a consanguinity, between Sparta and Ionia is not to be overlooked, and can hardly be explained by an admixture of Dorian (Epidaurian) elements among the settlers in Ionia, 1, 146, or even by the settlers in Johna, 1. 146, or even by the large mixture of non-Dorian elements in Sparta. The national pedgere had already been invented, ep. 1. 56-58, 8.

frivolous, exaggerated, and 'hybristic' tone about this speech, which helps to explain and justify the rejection of Aristagoras' suit at Sparta. Whether the speech is true and authentic is of course another question.

Meronylous. If this refers to the so-called first and second 'Messenian wars, it is one of two allusions to them in the whole of Hdt,'s work, cp. 3, 47. It may, however, only be a shadow or suggestion, reflected back from the 'third' war. Cp. 9. 35; though for-παλέας may be thought against this. Ισοπαλέας. Cp. 1. 82. Whereas the barbarians were εἐπετέες χειρωθήρας supra. The argument, however, would have been a curious one to use in order to persuade the Spartans to send a strong force to Asia: a thing they could only venture to do when they had nothing to fear from their neighbours, ep. 1, 68, 38, 'Αρκάδας. Cp. 1, 66, 9, 36, 'Αργάους. A big war with Argos was probably impending though neither Aristogoras nor Hdt. seems to realise the fact. Cp. 6, 76 ff.

39. τῶν πέρι. The Milesian appeals to the basest motives, and this at Spirta: these be 'Ionian' sentiments. Not but what Hdt. shows that a Spartiate would do a good deal for filthy lucre. Cp. the story of Glaukos 6. Sc. Aristagoras, however, appeals also to other and more respectable motives as well:

(1) Henour and ambition, (2) Religion,

(3) Affection. See supra.

40. The Modify magns. Probably an anachronism. That any Greek in the year 500 s.c. had such a notion is unlikely, though before Hdt. wrote, or gathered his materials, the march to Susa had loomed up as a possibility, a dream, which republican Greece was not destined to realise. Cp. Appendix VII. § 8. 50. 1. is тогойтоу, 'ne further.' Cp.

c. 28 supra. 5. διαβάλλων. Obviously different from the use in c. 96; but identical with the use (bis) c. 97.

7. ls τὴν 'Ασίην. What Aristageras would have wished was that the Spartage should attack not Susa but Sardes. This the Athenians actually did. Aristogoras' speech begins with a petition for the protection and liberation of Ionia, and ends with the offer of an Asiatic empire.

fain call in the Ephors, 3. 148; here he is represented apparently as enforcing it himself. We may well doubt if a king had this competence. It is not enumerated among the γέρεα 6. 56 ff.

51. 4. άποπέμψαντα 'after dismissing.' The immortal anecdote of Gorgo's astounding precocity, if true, must obviously be traced to the lady herself, since neither Kleomenes nor Aristagoras can be supposed to have divulged a story, the circumstances of which were so discreditable to both. The conduct of Kleomenes upon this occasion offers an interesting contrast to his youthful virtue some fifteen years before (3. 148). Thus men with age degenerate! Fifty talents would be some £12,000. Was it a bribe, or a war-subsidy? Themistokles afterwards, according to report, received thirty from the Euboeans 8. 4: sixty was all the Athenians obtained from the Egestaians in 415 B.C. (Thucyd. 6. 8) at that time, just enough to keep sixty vessels on service for one month. But it is hardly worth while to rationalise the fifty talents, when the story as a whole is discredited. See Appendix VII. § 8. 6. Γοργώ. The description is remarkable, coming so soon after c. 48. The two passages probably are independent. 52. 1. &Sc. This itinerary from Sardes to Susa is introduced on the somewhat lame plea that Aristagoras was prevented from enlarging further to Kleomenes περί τῆς ἀνόδου τῆς παρὰ βασιλέα. Had Anaxagoras been allowed to continue, he would hardly have spent his time on such an itinerary, even had he been qualified to expound it. The description of the road is a duller replica of the speech of Aristagoras just before: or perhaps rather the speech of A. is a lively creation based upon the itinerary. Cp. notes infra. The use of ἀμφὶ is remarkable.

That the road was well provided with guard stations (cp. c. 35 supra) would not have been a good argument to induce the Spartans to take to it: and so of the gates, rivers, etc. But the fact that it avoided the deserts (διὰ οἰκεομένης) might have been an inducement to the spoiler. So Aristagoras above indicates the countries by their inhabitants. On the stations (σταθμοί) and Khans (καταλύσιες) Bachr's note should be consulted.

5. & "Alvs. It is curious that Hdt. does not here expressly notice the bridge, ep. 1. 75; but perhaps the mention of the gates (melas) on the river, and the phraseology (διεξελάσαι . . διεκ-περάν), may be taken to imply a bridge, specially when contrasted with διαπορ-δμείσαι infra. The fact is the road must have crossed the Halys twice: (1) between Ankyra and Pteria or Tavium, (2) between Pteria and Mazaka, or some other town on the way to Euphrates. The bridge was presumably at the former passage. Hdt. was not accurately informed of the course of the Halys.

It appears possible that Herodotus here refers to the celebrated Pylor Kilikine, through which, Prof. Ramsay has said, "led the main road from all parts of the plateau of Asia minor to Cilicia in all periods of history" (Hist. Geogr. of Asia Minor, pp. 3401.). But the Royal Road, as described by Hdt., cannot have gone through the Fylac Kilikiae. A Kilikia, of which the Euphrates was a frontier, could never have been traversed in 154 parasangs from the Gates, 815a, 815a, ep. c. 40 sugra, and Appendix XIII. § 4, note.

15. 'Αρμενίη. Κιλίκων έχουται 'Αρμένοι, c. 40 supro. έν αύτοιοι is vague, but presumably = έν τοις 'Αρμενίης' κτλ. 3tein has transposed the sentence from below, and bracketed τ. 'Α. as an obvious gloss. The transposition redeems Hdt, from an extraordinary blunder, on which, and on the corruption of the text, cp. Appendix XIII. § 2.

The emendation is certain, for (1) otherwise no Parasangs are given for Matiene; (2) the totals infra do not agree with the items; (3) the measurement suits the region here, as in the speech of Aristagorus, denominated Matiene. Stein completed the purification of the text by the transfer and the brackets above noted. The passages have, however, here been dittographed, the better to exhibit the state of the case.

21. wurds évopasópevos, où wurds lwv. There can be little doubt that the rivers in question are the Greater and the Lesser Zab. Weissenborn proposed Lagaros instead of the first duros, van Herwerden prefers to insert LaBaros after ocropaçó-

It can hardly be doubted now that for the Itinerary Hdt. had written anthority. That the distances are given in parasange only shows that the road has been remeasured by Persian authority. The road itself, as Prof. W. M. Ramsay (Asia Minor, pp. 27 ff.) has demonstrated, was far older than the Persian period. The omission by Hdt. of all mention of the towns on route because a sales and Sarah tween Sardes and Susa is very unfortumate, and shows pretty plainly that there is no autopsy in the passage. That omission, the corruption of the text, and the introduction of the double Gates, have made the task of reconstructing, geographically, the actual course of the road, a difficult one. Kiepert gave the first adequate theory on the subject (Monatsberichte d. Berlin. Akad. 1857). Ramsay's more recent attempt (op. cet. sup.), where it departs from Kiepert's, is not in all respects preferable. For the fuller discussion of the question, and for Mr. Hogarth's argument in regard to the passage of the Euphrates, see App. XIII.

53. 2. op@s. The total given in this c.
did not correspond to the items in the c. preceding until de la Barre, followed by Stein, emended the passage above noticed. It is extremely unlikely that there was any arithmetical error in the text originally.

The Parasang (farsing) = 30 studia = 3 m. 787½ yds. (2.6). Ramsay reckons the Parasang at 2½ m. (ep. cit. p. 43). 13,660 studes, or 1500-1600 miles, is probably not an over-estimate: this road, however, by no means followed the short est available route from Sardes to the Halys, or again from the Halys to the Euphrates. See Appendix XIII.

54. 7. Menvoveiov acro. At one end of the Royal Road is the city of Memnon, Suss (cp. 7. 151), at the other end are certain monuments which Hdt. held to be Egyptian, but others ascribed to Memon. 2. 106. The monuments, incorrectly placed by Hdt. (cp. Ramsay, ep. c. pp. 30, 60), are 'Hittite' or Syre Kappadokian: and as Memon certainly represents an Upper Asiatic power (cp. Ed. Meyer, Geech. d. All. i. § 256) there was more to be said for ascribing the monuments to Memon than for ascribing them to Sessatria (cp. Wiedemann. certain monuments which Hdt. held to ing them to Sesostris (cp. In the regular course of his narrative Hdt. brings Aris-tagorus to Athus. He takes occasion.

tagoras to Athens. He takes occasion therefrom to insert a digression on the Peisistratidae, and the Liberation of Athens (cc. 55-95), which leads him to an excursus on the Gephyragans (c. 57), which involves a note on the Phoenicians in Bocotia (c. 58), which excuses a remark upon the origin of Greek culture, which merges in an appendix on certain Kad-meian inscriptions at Thebes (cc. 59-61): after which the main digression is resumed (c. 62). This main digression performs admirably two requirements, of which its author appears unconscious: first, it helps to explain why the suit of Aristagorus was rejected at Sparta; secondly, it goes far to explain why it was granted at Athens. Both explanations are contained in the history of the ten or twelve years preceding the applica-

3. Ίππίεω του τυράννου άδελφεόν.
If these words are genuino (and none of the previous editors appear to have suspected them), Hdt. is entirely clear of the popular error, which represented Hipparches as the tyrant, and Hippias as his successor. For the chronological importance of this indication, see The institution or reorganisation of the Panathenaca was not improbably due to Peisistratos, with whose policy such a festival would admirably square. (Cp. Mommsen, Heortologie, p. 112, Curtius, Gr. O. i. d 358, 359.) The religion, like the political régime, of the sons is of a somewhat darker complexion: though the difference is one of degree

7. ἀπειπάμενος. ἀπείπασθαι is common in Hdt. in the sense of to refuse: cp. 4. 120, 6. 100, et al. Here its use seems peculiar: occurancere, cp. L. & S. sub v. ducinov. The force of the middle voice in ducandaevos and of the imperfect tense in Evenue should not be missed.

57.1. ώς μέν αὐτοι λέγουσι. They might have been thought to be the bestauthority upon the subject. What grounds Hdt. had for discrediting the family tradition he does not state. Petersen, Quaestiones de Historia Gentium Attearum, pp. 6 f., suggests that a false etymology was the basis of Hdt.'s conjecture. In Syria was a city yelopt Gephyrae and Gephyra was an alias for the Bocotian Tanagra. was to be found in Hekataios, vide Steph. B. sub v.) Hence the 'Gephyraeans' were fabled to have come from Gephyrae and settled at Gephyra, before they found a home in Attica. But was it then an accident that the same name occurred in Phoenicia and in Bouotta, and for that matter in Attical Some Semitic names in Hellas the etymologists will probably leave us (but ep. Busolt, i.2 251, 263-271); and Semitic names and other indications surely point to Semitic immigrants. Cp. further, note to c. 58 infra. Petersen derives the proper name from γέφιρα, a bridge = Pontifices. But the derivation of the word γέφιρο itself is uncertain, as indeed its original meaning (Grasberger, Gr. Ortsnamen, ap-pears to make Γέφυρα = Dyke or Bridge town, and suggests, p. 297, that the ol name of Halikarnassos-Hdt.'s native cit -was Zeccipa, which he apparently iden tifies with Pedupa). That the Gephy racans should in Hellenic times disch in their Semitic origin would not be inex plicable. Etym. Mag. has Γεφορείς Δήμος Αττικός, δθεν Γεφοροία Δημήτηρ (quote in Petersen). Cp. L. & S. s. v. γεφερισμός. The Γεφιραίοι may have been th rivals or doubles of the l'empeis. W should then have, in the last statement in this chapter, an evidence of the earl independence of the Attic Demes.

7. Bocorav. Thue. 1. 12, 3 dates the Bocotian movement sixty years after the capture of Troy. This passage in Hdt. is in substantial agreement with that in Thucydides, and the two probably have a common origin (Hekataios !).

8. 'Αθηναίοι κτλ. The terminology is suspiciously recent, and the statement seems to imply the synoikism of Attica, and a graded franchise. The partial taboo, or excommunication, looks like the most genuine element in the tradition: cpt first note supra and c. 61 infra ad fin. Madvig's insertion of οὐ before πολλών is acceptable.

58. 1. οί Φοίνικες ούτοι. Presumably in part identical with the Kadmeians of c. 57, the other part being the Gephyraeans. Toepffer's article on the Gephyraeans. (attisch. Genealogic, pp. 293 ff.) exhibits the reaction against the 'Phoenician' theory. But the argument in favour of recognising Oriental and Semitic elements in the population of early Greece is not confined to local and gentile names, while the resolution of the traditions in its favour into mere products of pseudo-ctymology is un-acceptable. Questions respecting the primitive inhabitants of the Greek peninsula, or rather of the Aegean region, must be kept open, recent archaeological evidence tending (1) to push the per-pective of diffusion and settlement further and further back; (2) to suggest greater complexity and mixture than the followers of K. O. Muller, whether old or new, have been willing to recognise.

3. γράμματα. Hilt's hypothesis in regard to the origin of the Greek alphabet resolves itself into two main propositions. tions: (1) It was of Phoenician origin. (2) It was introduced or taught to the Greeks by the Phoenicians of Bocotia. It does not follow from these two propositions that the distinctively Greek alphabet was first used in Boootia, much less in Thebes: rather the statement (3) that it was Ionian replaces who received, assimilated, and transformed the Phoenician elements of culture (διδασκάλια), points to a different conclusion. It must, however, be admitted that the appeal in cc. 59 ff. to Theban examples of Kadmeian, i.e. palace-Hellenic letters, goes to show that Hdt. regarded Thebes as the cradle of Hellenic letters. Concerning this theory of Hdt. it is to be the conditional that whatever by the character. cerning this theory of Helt, it is to be observed that, whatever be the character of 'Kadmos,' the ascription of the Greek alphabet to a Phoenician original is an 'historical' theory, as distinguished from a mythological theory (e.g. that of Aischylos, who ascribes it to Prometheus, P. V. 468 f.): secondly, that the theory is probably right. (Cp. Roberts, Greek Epigraphy, §§ 1 ff., Hinrichs, in Iwan Muller's Handbuch, i. pp. 359 ff.) The same, however, cannot be said for the localisation of the primitive Greek alphabet in Bocotia, or even on the mainland of Greece. So far as evidences at present go, it appears that Greek at present go, it appears that Greek alphabets were first employed in the islands of the Aegean, particularly Thera and Krete. It is a third point in the Herodotean hypothesis that it was the Ionians who first adapted the Phoenician alphabet to the service of the Hellenes. As Hdt. nowhere locates Ionians in Bocotia, this statement would tend to qualify the inference from his quoting only Theban inscriptions, and to suggest that he is, perhaps, thinking of Euboca, Attica, Peloponnese or the Marathonian tetrapolis, as the Ionian centres which had dealings with the 'Kadmeians,' though he is unable to adduce any instance of archaic lettering except from Thebes. On Hdt.'s view of the Ionian mediation it is to be observed that the Ionic alphabet was not the first but the last state of Hellenic letters, the one that survived and displaced a host of rival alphabets, as at Athens after the Archouship of Eukleides (403-2 n.c.). This Ionian alphabet was that used in Asia, where it early asserted itself at the expense of any other, and was employed for example in Helt,'s native city in his own day. (Halikarnassian inscription, Hicks, Manual, No. 21.) Whether it was locally a product and modification of the absolutely first Greek alphabet, this being neither of European nor of Nesiote, but of Asiatic-Ionian origin, may perhaps be an open question. In any case Hdt.'s statement that the authors of the distinctively Greek alphabet (or alphabets) were Ionians is probably true; at least as against a 'Dorian' elaim. For, though Thera passed in the fifth century for 'Dorian,' the validity of that theory is extremely doubtful. See 4. 147. Hdt. makes two other observations on Greek writing: 2. 28 where he states on Greek writing: 2. 36 where he states that Greek writing went from right to left, without noticing the other archaic methods; 1. 130 where he seems to indiente the co-existence of different sibilant symbols in the older alphabets. Cp. Roberts, op. c. supra, p. 9. Whether the Hellenes, or inhabitants of the Peninsula, even before the coming of the Phoenicians, or of the Dorians, had alphabets, is a question which the present state of the evidence hardly raises, much less solves : and even if solved in the affirmative, the Phoenician origin of the historic alphabet

meptoliceov. In Euboca, Attica, Peloponnesos, the islands. Probably Hdt. is right substantially: for the Ionians were the first of the distinctly Hellenic stocks to have extensive dealings with the Phoenicians, as appears from the Semitio name for the Greeks, i.e.

Jaman. των χώρων del. Kruger. 9. μεταρρυθμίσαντες. Hdt. on an obscure subject sometimes grows obscure in his expressions, as here, cp. 6, 67.
He has just said that the Phoenicians who entered Greece changed their language, and modified their letters. Now he says the Ionians modified the letters they learned from the Phoenicians. It is not clear whether he thinks the Ionians medified still further letters already modified by the (Hellenised) Phoenicians, or whether he thinks that the Ionians were the first to change the letters.

14. πολλοί is perhaps an exaggeration. Ktesias mentions the Persian Archives as διφθεραί βασιλικαί. See L. S. S. s. γράμματα. It has generally been concluded that these inscriptions were unauthentic: for Hdt, seems to us-sume that in the days of Laws and of Oidipus the inhabitants of Thebes not Oidipus the inhabitants of Thebes not merely spake and wrote good Greek, but even composed their inscriptions in Hexameter verse. According to his own chronological scheme, if we may attempt to rationalise one for him, this would set the origin of Greek writing as far back as 1500 n.c. (cp. 4, 147). It is of course possible that the objects, on which the inscriptions were to be read. which the inscriptions were to be read, were much older than the inscriptions themselves. As Rawlinson remarks: "The inscription can at best only have expressed the belief of the priests as to the person who dedicated the tripod." Hicks (Manual of lik. Inser. p. 2) follows Bergk in dismissing these inscriptions as hardly earlier than the seventh cent. But perhaps Hdt. did not mean that the very words he gives were inscribed or legible on the anathemata: he may be or legible on the chanceman; he may or giving a proposed version of archaic mescriptions. 9. Kexwpiopilva. The separate cultus no doubt points, as Hdt. rightly suggests, to a difference of origin and kinship. Later political union did not wholly obliterate such traces and survivals, even in Attiea. Cp. c. 66 infra. 'Achaian' Demeter is Demeter of the Lamentations (Etym. M. sub v.): the Hellenic Mater Dolorosa: but not necessarily the Same as Γεφυραία Δημήτηρ (Demeter of the Bridge, Et. M. s.v. Γεφυρείς). This shrine of Achaian Demeter was presumably in Aphidnae, vide c. 57 supra.

62. 2. καν άρχάς relers back merely to c. 55 where Hdt. started the λόγος, ἀς

 65 infra. However, another tradition Alkmaionidae & Apheos. and leaving the origin of the Peisistratidae at least an open question (Pausanias 2, 18, 9). Indeed, this tradition traced the Alkmaionidae to Neleus and Nestor. A unison of these discords may be effected in these ways. in three ways: (1) by supposing that both the Poisistratidae and the Alkmaionidae were immigrants, and indeed relatives: in which case the repudiation of the relationship has to be explained. (2) By supposing that neither the one nor the other were immigrants, but both alike native Athenians; in which case the theories of their foreign origin remain to be explained. (3) By supposing that one was, and one was not, of foreign extraction: in which case the false claim remains to be explained in each case. Petersen, Quaestiones etc., prefers (2) and explains away the foreign origin hypothesis by ascribing it to an ambition to connect the great families of Athens with the great families of Peloponnesos. But he admits that the tradition of the Peloponnesian origin of the Alkmaionidae is the older tradition, and he dismisses too easily the memories of immigration into Attiea. Few pretensions are more transparent fictions than the claim of the Athenians, in the fifth century B.C. to be children of the soil, free of all foreign taint, Ionian, Pelasgian, and such like. (3) would lead to the con-clusion that the Peisistratidae were louian immigrants, and the Alkmaion-idae the native stock. But, as Petersen points out, the tradition of the foreign origin of the Alkmaionidae can seareely be later than Hdt., rather does our author appear to be expressly combating and denying such a view. We are thus driven back to (1). Both families were foreign, i.e. from the Peloponneses, and perhaps related. The Peisistratidae proudly preserved this family tradition. The Alkmaionidae repudiated it, owing probably to their quarrel with Peisistrates and his sons, and put themselves at the head of an Athenian movement before the end of the sixth century, which involved the negation of all foreign claims and clements, Peloponnesian, Ionian, Pelas-gian, and the assertion of the indigenous primitive earth born character of the whole Athenian and Attic population. Cp. cc. 66, 69 infra. Thucydides with his more systematic rationalism tries to be just to the rival views, recognising the foreign extraction of the great families, yet asserting the autochthonous origin of the masses. Nor is this view perhaps far from the truth. Thue, 1. 2.

The fort was probably upon Parnes, and above Paionidae. Hdt.'s description is based on a confusion of Haiovidar and Haiavia, and the text of the $A\theta$, π , is probably an intentional correction, based on more accurate knowledge of Attic topography.

The estimate fixed by the council for the rebuilding was 300 T. and the money was raised by donations from various quarters including Exymp. from various quarters, including Egypt, 2. 180. The exiled Alkmaionidae seem to have undertaken to complete (εξοικοδομησαι) the structure, which may have μήσαι) the structure, which may have been at a stand for want of funds. As gratitude is a short-lived faculty, probably this act of the Alkmaionidae was not long previous to the expulsion of the Peisistratidae. It was still pursued with envy (φωίνος) in 490 n.c. when Pindar wrote the (seventh) Pythian Epinicion in honour of Magakles, and half nikion in honour of Megakles: and half a century later it was the chief title of his children to fame.

Still as we have now in the 'Αθηγαίων πολετεία, c. 19, what is obviously an Athenian version of the whole affair (cp. Appendix IX. § 4), the discovery supports and verifies the conjecture of Schweighauser.

2. την Πυθίην. The Pythia was not above suspicion, cp. 6. 66, though whether a douceur to the prophetess alone would have had the desired effect may be fairly doubted. It may also be thought that the Delphic authorities be thought that the Delphic authorities would have needed very little inducement to preach a crusade against the Peisistratidae, whose pieties looked in other directions, vide c. 56 supra, and whose pomps and buildings were not calculated to further the special interests of Delphi. The fact that these first ex-positions are by sea may perhaps explain the absence of the king.

7. ξανίους . . τὰ μάλιστα. The Spartans had no objection to an alliance with 'tyranny' when it suited their own interests. But 'tyranny' at Athens (or Sardes, or Susa, or Syracuse) was one thing: in Sparta, or even in Peloponuese, another. It was not, according to the Lakedaimonians, on political grounds that they expelled the Peisistratidae, but on religious, 'putting the god he fore the men.' Athenian tradition saw in the Argive alliance a political motive. 'Ac. wox. 19. Policy indeed afterwards led the Spartans to project a restoration, ec. 90 ff. infra. Statecraft was far more highly developed in and after "the age of the Despots" than Hdt. appears to realise.

The connexion between Athens and Thessaly remained a permanent idea of democratic Athens: and if the Thessalians κουβ γνώμη had sent to support the Athenian tyrant (c. 511 n.c.) in Hdt.'s own time the Athenian democracy had own time the Athenian democracy had attempted the restoration of Orestes in Thessaly (B.c. 554, Thuc. 1, 111). χιλίην τε ἴππου καὶ τὸν βασιλέα τὸν σφέτερου Κινέην ἄνδρα Κονιαῖου τοὺς ἐπείτε ἔσχον συμμάχους οἱ Πεισιστρατίδαι, ις ἐμηχανῶντο τοιάδε κείραντες τῶν Φαληρέων τὸ πεδίον καὶ ὑππάσιμου ποιήσαντες τοῦτον τὸν χῶρον ἐπῆκαν τῷ στρατοπέδῷ τὴν ἵππου ἐμπεσοῦσα δὲ διέφθειρε ἄλλους τε πολλοὺς τῶν Λακεδαιμονίων καὶ δὴ καὶ τὸν ᾿Αγχιμόλιον τοὺς δὲ περιγενομένους αὐτῶν ἐς τὰς νέας κατεῖρξαν. ὁ μὲν δὴ πρῶτος στόλος ἐκ 20 Λακεδαίμονος οῦτω ἀπήλλαξε, καὶ ᾿Αγχιμολίου εἰσὶ ταφαὶ τῆς ᾿Αττικῆς ᾿Αλωπεκῆσι, ἀγχοῦ τοῦ Ἡρακλείου τοῦ ἐν Κυνοσάργεϊ.

16. the γανώντο. Blakesley has pointed out, and Rawlinson has admitted, some difficulty in envisaging or rationalising the military situation and movements described in this chapter. It is not easy to understand why Auchimolios was buried at Alopekai unless he fell there: if he fell there, he must have advanced off the Phalerian plain, and past the city, for Alopekai lay between Lykabettos and the Ilissos. (Smith, Geogr. Dict. i. 3276, ep. Curtius and Kaupert, Allas v. Allea, Blatt ii.) In that case the Thessalian horse would have been between the Lakedaimonians and these, and any survivers who reached their ships could only have done so by bursting through the lines of the Athenians and Thessalians. It is, however, very easy to invent hypotheses to explain this difficulty, admitting that Anchimolios fought and fell at Alopekai. To take the most obvious: the Spartans must have left on the strand a force to guard the ships. The narrative is curt and inadequate, but there is nothing self-contradictory or inexplicable in it. 22. 'Hakkdov. It was here that graphical fixture, but for the notoriety it had obtained in connexion with the Marathonian campaign. The passage suggests, though it does not prove, autopsy. Cp. Introduction, pp. lx f. The idiomatic plural rapal is observable.

64. 1. perá. The Lakedaimonians had now a defeat to avenge, or at least a disgrace to obliterate, for this expedition is marked distinctly as a separate and subsequent act, and we must not suppose that the troops under Kleomenes were intended to co-operate with the force of Auchimolios. But cp. 6, 70, for an instance of such strategy.

10. τω, Πελασγικώ τείχει. The old wall round the Akropolis, 6. 137, within which probably the Peisistratidae had their dwelling, cp. Pausan. 1. 28, 3 τη δε άκροπόλει πλην όσον Κίμων εκοδόμησεν αὐτῆς ὁ Μελταδου, περιβαλείν τὸ λοιπόν λέγεται του τείχους Πελασγούς οικήσαντάς ποτε του τείχους Πελασγους οικήσαντας ποτε έπο την διαρόπολεν. Cp. Curtius, Steelt-gosch. v. Athen, lxxvi. p. 68, Harrison, Muthology and Monuments, pp. 525 tf. (The correct form of the word seems to be Πελαργικόν.) The question arises: how, if Athens was at that time a walled city, the Spartans managed to pass the gates! The existence of the party of 'Liberators' just referred to might suggest a solution of this difficulty: the Akropolis was held by the Peisistratidae against citizen and foreigner alike. Yet the doubt whether Athens was a walled city recurs in connexion with the story of Marathon, and the story of Salamis, and the accumulated doubts have led Wilamowitz-Moellendorff to answer the question in the negative, Ans Kydathen, pp. 97 ff.
The problem is described by Curtius (Stadly, p. 90) as one of the most difficult in the history of the city. There are three arguments for a wall: (1) Themistokles is said to have rebuilt and enlarged the walls, Thuc. 1. 89 ff. (2) Hipparchos was assassinated in the Kerameikos: the assassins entered through the Gates: Thuc. 6. 57. (3) The Gate of Hadrian marks a point in a prae-Themistoklean city-wall. Curtius proposes therefore a compromise. ascribes to the tyrants an intention, partially carried out, to build a citywall of about 20 stades in circumference. wall of about 20 stades in circumference.

But this compromise is hardly satisfactory. Why the old ring-wall can only belong to the age of the despots (ein solcher kann nur der Tyrannenzeit angehören, op. c. p. 90), is not self-evident.
The despotic family or dynasty would be better able to hold a citadel than a fortified city, and as likely to destroy as to build a wall of 20 stades circumfurence, though they might have cumference: though they might have left old gateways standing. In any case, if there was a wall, it night have been built before the age of l'eisistratos: but it can hardly have been effective in the days of Marathon. Cp. 6, 109. 65. 1. &v. Athens might be reckoned as one of the 'great' (Hellenic) powers, though possibly unknown to the Persian, c. 105 infra. The καl πριν presumably refers to the period of the tyranny, and hardly squares with 1. 59, 65. Anyway the increase or revival of power is antedated: probably the immediate effect of the expulsion of the l'eisistratids was to weaken the power of Athens.

of Hippokleides, an undoubted Philaid, who was to duckatter related to the Kypselids of Corinth, see 6, 128; but we cannot argue therefrom that this Isa-goras belonged to the Philaidae: the notice here rather points to an opposite conclusion: even though the passage in Bk. 6 may be a late addition. The 'Ac. πολ. c. 20 describes Isagoras as φίλος ων τών τυράνων, meaning the Peisistratids, which is unlikely. If by Karizn Zeus' were meant the Zeus Stratios or Labrandeus worshipped by the Karians (vide c. 119 infra) the statement would go to show that Isagoras was of Karian au-cestry. It would, however, be astonish-ing to find a pure Karian stock at home in Athens. We need not go further than Megara for the cradle of the family.

Megara for the cradle of the family. The Megaraian akropolis was called Karia (Pausan. 1. 40, 6) and Zeus was there wershipped: though in Pausanias' time it was 'Olympian' Zeus.

9. "Iwvos. That these divisions are

'Ionian' and not 'Attic' should now be recognised. Rawlinson calls them "ancient hereditary tribes of Attica"; Duncker definitely regards Attica as their cradle, and speaks of them habitually as the 'Attic Phylae.' But unless we are to believe not merely that the Ionian cities in Asia, but also that the Ionians of the Peloponnese and elsewhere, really were colonies of Athens, we must conclude that this system was common to Ionians, and that the abolition of the system for political purposes at Athens was part of a general anti-Ionian movement. The weight of tradition or ancient theory is in favour of some such conclusion. The Phylac are closely attached to lon: they are never called 'Attic' by any ancient writer: but as lon was provided for in Attica, the Phylar are there attached to the soil. Phylar are there attached to the son. It suited Athens from time to treassert her solidarity with the Ionians; the 'metropolitan' idea was emphasised in the fifth century, and Athens took the place of Miletos as the πρόσχημα τῆς 'Ιωνίης in the larger sense; but to regard Attica as the cradle of the Ionian stock and the Ionian Phylac as originally Attic, generalised by the colonial diffusion, is to be more Ionian than the lonians or Athenians themselves ever were. However, even if it were admitted that Attiea was the first home of the Ionians, and that the four Phylas came into existence there first, this would not make them 'Attic' as distinct from i Ionian.' Atties is not a genetic but a local designation, and cannot be the summum genus of genetic divisions. Such an expression as Hdt. uses 1. 59 το 'Αττικόν έθνος is obviously unscientific, and belongs to a time when the political unification of Attion had given a sort of 'ethnic' unity to all Athenians. Its application to the Athenians of the age of

they were the proper names of veritable persons, sons of Ion, ancestors and eponyms of the four Phyloc, can hardly be now advocated. There being no positive evidence in favour of the existence of the persons, it is probable that the names are products of the same historic imagination as that which created on Amphietyon to be founder of the Amphietyons, and rationalised the supposed ethnic affinities of the Hellenie stocks into the national pedigree, marking the cadetship in Hellenism of Ionians and Achaians by making Ion and Achaios one step farther removed than Doros and Aiolos from Hellen. That the names were once significant can hardly be doubted; but their significance is not clear, Felégeres has been connected with IDA denoting brightness. That l'eléoures not Teléoures is the correct form of the word is proved by inscriptions from Teos, Kyzikos, and Attica (C.I.G. 3078, 3664, 3665, and Ross, Attisch-Demon. S. VII. Stein), a fact of which L. & S. take no notice, sub v. Teléovres. Alywopers is taken to mean goatherds (vide L. & S. sub v.). But who will venture to guarantee that etymology in view of the aigis and its possibilities, cp. 4. 180 supra, and Atyanèes e. 68 infra. 'Apyanes's (apyan = épyan, so Stein, but this seems violent. 'Epyanèss is found in Plutarch, Solon 23, probably from a conjecture of the copyist to give the sense of Husbandmen, L. & S.) might as well be connected with API shining, as Performer with PEA. The Oπλητες cannot be the heavy armed (= όπλιτας I. & S.) or 'warriors,' otherwise they would not hold the fourth place, least of all if the names stood in rank. That the first name should stand for 'Priests' is well-nigh impossible: there were priests in every 'tribe,' and a separate caste of priests as such could hardly have disappeared. The names are apparently co-ordinate: they may bave something to say to employments, or to totems; but the origin and meaning of the names were evidently lost to the Ionians, or at least the Athenians, in Helt.'s time. On the subject ep. K. F. Hermann's Lehrbuch, i. § 54, pp. 294 ff.

10. erepay. Not Ionian, but quite different; local, indigenous heroes, of the true Attic stock, the Ionian element in Attica being foreign. The Alartis took its name from Alas of Salamis, which since its conquest by l'eissistates had been an Athenian kleruchy, and probably the first of its kind: cp. c. 77 infra.

It is remarkable that there is no hint in Hdt. of the method by which the eponyms for the new Ihylar were selected. He represents it as the immediate work of Kleisthenes (ἐξευρῶν . . προσεθετο, though the latter, it may be observed, is middle voice). The 'Αθ, πολ. c. 21 supplies the omission with much verisinilitude: ταίς δὲ ψελαῖς ἐποίησεν ἐπωνέμους, ἐκ τῶν προκρθέντων ἐκατὸν ἀρχηγετῶν, οἐς ἀνείλεν ἡ Πεθία δέκα. Cp. further c. 50 infra and Appendix IX. § 0.

67. 1. δοκέαν ἰμοί. Hdt. makes himself responsible for the curious view of Kleisthenes' pelicy. The minutic aspect is decidedly far fetched: the contrast between the two policies is more obvious than the resemblance. Hdt.'s reflections on politics are sometimes defective; cp. Introduction. § 22.

Introduction, § 22.

2. μητροπάτωρ. The exact connexion is not cleared up till 6. 126 ff, in the story of the wedding of Agariste. That the Athenian 'Liberator' should be grandson and namesake of a Despet throws some light on the alleged 'misotyrannism' of the Alkmaionidae. Cp. 6. 121 ff.

6. 121 ff.

Zuvun, one of the great Dorian states of the Peloponneses 8. 43 (cp. Pausanias, 2. 6, 7, 7. 1), was not a member of the Achaian Dodekapolis 1. 145, though the time came (251 L.c.) when it "stooped to ask for admission to the franchise of the remaint of the conquered Achaians" (Freeman, History of Federal Government, 2nd ed. p. 285). The repairs in Sikyon no doubt marks, as everywhere in the Peloponneses, at least in the vii. vi. centuries u.c., a reaction and revival of the native or prace-Dorian population and interests against the Dorian conquenors (cp. e. 92 infra). In the case of Sikyon this movement is complicated by a rivalry with Argos. It shows how completely the Homeric poems had been appro-griated by the Dorian conquerors that the Achaian representative of the antiand prac-Dorian interests in opposition to Dorian Argos surrenders the works, which celebrated the Achaian heroes, to the men who had usurped their places and exploited their traditions. But as Blakesley points out, the objection of Kleisthenes would hardly apply to the Iliad and Odyssey, and so we must understand by Opineea Eng the Thebais and Epigoni (with Stein) or the Thebais-Epigoni (cp. Bethe, Thetan. Heldent. p. 38), a view which is borne out by the reference to Adrastos below, who is barely mentioned in the two former, while he must have been the chief hero of the latter poem, or poems. Yet Hdt., who had doubts as to the 'Homeric' authorship of the Kypria (2, 117), would hardly have ascribed the Thebais or Epigoni to Homer.

3. 'Αργείοισι πολφιήσας. The date of this war cannot be fixed: it is curious to find the tyrant of Sikyon doing the work of Sparta: Sparta may have been still eclipsed by 'Dorian' Argos. The

How Adrastos came to be buried at Sikyon is Adrastos came to be buried at Sikyon is not made clear: he was reported to have died at Megara, on the way back from Thebes (Pausan. 1. 43, 1). Some held that the tomb in Sikyon was a cenotaph (Schol. to Pindar, Nom. 9. 30). As Hero he was specially connected with Adrasteia-Nomesis, and was the Avenget ("der unentrinnbare Rächer" ά-διδράσκω); see Schöll, apud Pauly, i. 2 pp. 187 ff., Roscher (tation verbis), 78 ff., Posnansky, op. cit. pp. 82 ff. A tyrant might well object to Adrastos!

xopolor. Presumably dithyrambie, without getting so far as dramatic impersonation, though probably with a mimetic element: cp. Bergk, Gr. L.-G. ii. pp. 252 ff. and Flack, Gr. Lyrik, p. 309.

The transfer of the tragic chorus to Dionysos was perhaps a 'popular' act, as the expulsion of Adrastos was 'anti-Argive' and the tribal readjustment 'anti-Dorian.' The three mark three moments in a rational policy, further moments in a rational policy, further exhibited in the alliances with Athens and Thessaly, the service to Delphi, the wedding of Aguriste. It may have been at this period that the myth was developed that 'Sikyon,' the eponymous hero of the place, was an Athenian, though Pausanias reports it in Hesiod 1. 6, 3. The alternative view, supported by Ibykos, that Sikyon was the son of Pelops tells its own moral. Κλεισθένης δὲ χοροὺς μὲν τῷ Διονύσῷ ἀπέδωκε, τὴν δὲ ἄλλην 88 θυσίην Μελανίππῷ. ταῦτα μὲν ἐς ᾿Αδρηστόν οἱ ἐπεποίητο. φυλὰς δὲ τὰς Δωριέων, ἵνα δὴ μὴ αἱ αὐταὶ ἔωσι τοῖσι Σικυωνίοισι καὶ τοῖσι ᾿Αργείοισι, μετέβαλε ἐς ἄλλα οὐνόματα. ἔνθα καὶ πλεῖστον κατεγέλασε τῶν Σικυωνίων ἐπὶ γὰρ ὑός τε καὶ 5 ὄνου τὰς ἐπωνυμίας μετατιθεὶς αὐτὰ τὰ τελευταῖα ἐπέθηκε, πλην τῆς ἐωυτοῦ φυλῆς ταύτῃ δὲ τὸ οὔνομα ἀπὸ τῆς ἐωυτοῦ ἀρχῆς ἔθετο. οὖτοι μὲν δὴ ᾿Αρχέλασι ἐκαλέοντο, ἔτεροι δὲ Ὑᾶται.

27. ἀπέδωκε. Something turns upon the meaning of this word, or perhaps the meaning of the word must be determined by historical arguments. Does it mean 'restored,' 'gave back,' or does it mean simply: 'duly assigned,' 'rightly gave up'! From the instances (cp. L. & S. p. 179), it is obvious that it may here mean either. Does Holt, imply that the choruses had been taken from Dionyse. If so, by whom ? Bergk (op. c. 251) is prepared with the answer, arguing that political motives had led to the transfer of the honours to Adrastos, and that Kleisthenes "restored the tragic cho-Alesstrones restored the trage enoruses to their original object." The first rebbery is put down conjecturally to the Sikyonian poet Epigenes (ep. Bergk, I.c.). This view is endorsed by Mahatfy, Gk. Lit. i. 2 c. xiv. and inst. But the conjecture seems cal mil. But the competine seems chaborate and superfluous, if Adrastos was originally a 'Chthoman' divinity. Even if Hdt., or his source, had intended by drebace a 'restoration,' the fact would not be indisputable, for it would have been natural enough to represent such an innovation as a restoration : but the text of Hdt. does not support the view, his statement being that the men of Sikvon used to honour not Dionysos, but Adrastos, until Kleisthenes, so to speak, divided the divine from the heroic elements in the cult of Adrastos, assigning the divine to Dionysos and the heroic to Melanippos, the one a Theban hero, and the other a god, of special association with Theles indeed, but as a god not tied and bound to a sepulchre.

άλλην. Cp. 4. 101, c. 32 supra.
68. 3. οὐνόματα. A mere change of name would not have broken down the Dorian phylic system in Sikyon, nor could the members of the Dorian Phylae have been persuaded to adopt and maintain sixty years after the death of

Kleisthenes-down to the date of the expulsion of the Peisistratidae from Athens-mere nicknames or terms of contempt. Is it even certain that the 'Pig' and the 'Ass' were contemptible animals in the eyes of Adrasteians or of Dionysites! In the form of a wild Boar, ul'a xoima bos, the Piz might play a providential rôle in an Adrastos-Myth (cp. 1. 34 ff.), and though not perhaps in 'purely Hellenie' religion, yet in the religion of Hellenes, the Pig was an holy animal (cp. Ramsay, Asia Minor, pp. 31 f.). The Ass, indeed, was in little reverence among the Greeks (cp. Paraemiographi, ed. Gaisford, or Leutsch and Schneidewin, Index, sub v.), yet his name appears honourably associated with the landscape of Hellas in ένου γνάθος, δτου βάχες, το Ότειον (a hill near Corinth) (cp. Grasberger, Studien, p. 99), albeit this nomenclature may have been a bequest from a people, other than Hellenes, that had the Ass in more honour. If the Archelai become the localised Aigilees, who certainly the localised Aigilies, who certainly represent a prac Dorian population, the 'nicknames' might possibly represent localities, and localisations of the Dorian phylic. Cp. 'Υάμπολες, Σύεσσα, 'Τάμπεια, Σύαγγος, Σύβστα, al Χουράδες et al. (Grasberger, op. c. p. 101). 'Pigs, 'Asses,' 'Swine' are possible totems, for which however parallels can hardly be found. Performs where the control of the co haps names and nicknames existed side by side, and were not used by the same classes or persons at Sikyon. The 60 years may mark the duration of the anti-Derian regime at Sikyon, and the supposed recovery of the old tribal names may signify in reality the restoration of the Dorian and aristocratic régime. (Stein quotes l'Iutareh, Mor. 850 = de Herceloti mulij, c. 22, where the expulsion of a tyrant Aischines from Sikyon by the Spartans is mentioned, but not dated.)

11. μετίβαλον. We might have expected πάλιν or some word to indicate that the change was a restoration, if a restoration it really was. Hylicis, Pamphyli, Dymanes were the three 'tribes' of Dorians: though the first, as descendants of 'Herakles,' and the second, on plain etymological grounds, look little like pure Dorian kinships. Steph. Hyz. sub ν. λυμάν is much to the point: φελον λωμέων, ήσαν δὲ τρείς 'Τλλείς και Πάμφιλοι και λιμάνες ἐξ 'Πρακλόνις. και προπετέθη ἡ 'Τρευθια ώς Έφορος α΄. 14. Alyadis was undoubtedly a name for the non-Dorian population 'along shore.' Cp. 7. 94. On the hypothetical eponymous ancestor ep. e. 66 supra. The non-Dorian, prac-Dorian character of Adrastos comes out plainly: whether he was an 'Ionian,' Achaian, l'elasgian, Asiatic, or what not, is hard to say. According to one tradition Sikven was originally called Aigialeia and the same Sikven washed the Attic and the name Sikvon marked the Attie (Ionian) advent: Pausan. 1. 6, 2.

69. 3. δοκάω ἀμοί. Cp. c. 67 supra. Helt. makes himself explicitly responsible for this theory or reflection; was it not one he borrowed or found ready made in Athens? But the motive here ascribed to Kleisthenes is superficial, and misses the full and the true significance of the change described. The imitative element (¿μωρίσατο) in the change is not conspicuous: an anti-Ionian reform, as such, is not an imitation of an anti-Iorian reform: and the Athenians did not secrete from the lonian organisation, or case to celebrate the great Ionian festival (1, 147), much less invent nicknames for the old tribes. Nay more, it is probable that many Ionians in Athens were enfranchised by Kleistheness, among his metic citizens, Arist. Fel. 3, 2, 3 (1275b). In so far, however, as the reform of Kleistheness was a democratic move, and broke with the ancient regime, based on blood and genetic associations, it offered some analogy to the policy of his grandfather at Sikyon. An anti-Ionian character might, indeed, to some extent seem to belong to it, inasmuch as the breach with the foreign policy and relations of the Peisistratidae, and the preoccupation with domestic questions, might bring about a temporary chill or estrangement with Deles, Naxos, Miletos, Euboca. Yet within ten years, if Holt, may be trusted, an Ionian alliance was formed at Athens, expressly on the ground of the consanguinity and metropolitan connexion, c. 97 mfea.

6. πάντων where it stands makes no sense. To insert μεταδιδούς, as Stein suggests, is to charge Hdt, with a great exaggeration; to read απωσμέτον πάντων τότε πρός κτλ. involves a possible exaggeration. The best sense would be made by reading τότε παντα... Kless-τὰς φυλάς μετωνόμασε καὶ ἐποίησε πλεῦνας ἐξ ἐλασσόνων δέκα τε δὴ φυλάρχους ἀντὶ τεσσέρων ἐποίησε, δέκα δὲ καὶ τοὺς δήμους κατένειμε ἐς τὰς φυλάς ἡν τε τὸν δῆμον προσθέμενος πολλῷ κατύ-

7. τὰς φυλὰς μετωνόμασε. Misled by his false parallel Hdt. mistakes the nature of the reform. The four Phylae must have remained, or at least the φρατρίαι which were their sub-divisions, and which appear in post-Kleisthenic Athens, in use even for civil purposes. Cp. 'Λυην. πολ. 21. 6 τὰ δὲ γένη καὶ τὰς φρατρίας καὶ τὰς Ιεροσύνας εἰασεν ἔχειν ἐκαστους κατὰ τὰ πάτρια, with Sandys' note. But on Λημοριάς I. 8. 10.

note. But op. Appendix IX. § 10. δέκα τε δή κτλ. The notion that in the Kleisthenic phylac there were at any time one hundred Demi neither more nor less must now be regarded as utterly untenable in view of the evidence of the Adyvalus moderela, which (1) lends no support to it, (2) presents an alternative, c. 21. The question remains whether Hdt. in this passage justifies that notion, and shared that error. In commenting on this passage, before the discovery of the $A\theta$. π , and at a time when the arguments of Schomann and others in favour of the 100 Demes, ten to each Phyle, appeared to have been raised almost to demonstration by the reading of the Berlin Fragment (H. Diels, Ueber die Berliner Fragmente, etc. Berlin, 1885, p. 24) I ventured to suggest that either the text was corrupt, or Hdt.'s own view on the matter was confused, for no one wishing to say that Kleisthenes distributed the (100) demes, ten to each of the Phylae, would have expressed himself as in the text: nor could the text as it stood be translated naturally, except to mean that there were ten Demi distributed into the Phylae, which of course was nonsense, as δέκα φυλάρχουs implied that the number of the Phylae was ten. Madvig had solved the difficulty by deleting δέκα δέ, a proceeding at once drastic and in-sufficient. Can the text thus produced: δέκα τε δή φυλάρχους άντι τεσσέρων emolyse και τους δήμους κατένειμε ές τάς φυλάς be regarded as satisfactory? It leaves the number of the Phylae a matter of inference, and it puts the cart before the horse, the 'Phylarchs' before the 'Phylae': while it leaves the corruptela as great a difficulty as ever. Hdt.

8. φυλάρχους. We might have expected στρατηγούς, whose existence, number, and title are implied in the narrative of the Marathonian campaign (6. 109) and whose institution has in general been inferentially assigned to Kleisthenes. Nor can the 'Αθην. πολ. c. 22 be taken to assert that the ten strategi were only instituted in 501 B.C., nor, if it could, would the case of the 'Phylarchs' in Hdt. be any clearer. After resserow must be supplied gran-matically foldarzwe, but technically fulobasidiw (cp. Ad. n. 8. 41, 67), and if φύλαρχος can thus stand generically for pulo daoileus why not for orparayos ! But the chief material difficulty arises from the fact that at the time when Hdt, was writing there were not merely ten strategi, but there were also ten Phylarchs, properly so called, the commanders of the cavalry, as were the taxiarchs of the Hoplites, cp. ' Λv . π . c. 61. The same treatise c. 30 carries the Phylarchs back beyond the last decade of the fifth century (411 B.C.); and they may be safely carried farther back to the period of the creation, or develop-ment and reorganisation of the cavalry, which amounted at the outbreak of the Peloponnesian war probably to 1000 (100 from each Phyle!), Aristoph. Eq. 225, Xenoph. Hipparch. 9. 3, or 1290 ξεν Ιπποτοξόταις, Thuc. 2. 13. In the time of Kleisthenes they may not have amounted to above 100; they have no record in the battle of Marathon (ep. 6. 112). At the battle of Plataca there may have been 300 (cp. 9. 21, 22). Andokides, indeed, appears to give a date for these 300, de Pace § 5-but it is almost impossible to base any inference on the pussage (see Jebb, Attic Orators, i. p. 130) even if it be genuine. In any case Hdt. writing at a date when the Phylarchs are prominent officers in Athens, leaves this passage uncorrected the inference is inevitable that he was not sufficiently careful or well informed in regard to Athenian institutions.

71, 1. &6c. The story of the origin of the ayor is told by Thucydides 1. 126 at greater length and varying in some important particulars from the version of Hdt., and Plutarch, Solon 12, takes sides with Thucydides. The Thucydidean version is more complete, intelligible, and authoritative than the story as here told, and is certainly a designed correction if not of the text of Hdt. at least of the (Alkmaionid) tradition upon which the text of Hdt. is based. This will appear from the comments following. It may now be added that the 'Αθηναίων πολιτεία lends no support to the Herodotean version. True, the new text just misses recording the story of Kylon, but (1) Plutarch (l. c.) may be taken as evidence for the version in the 'Αθ. π. (2) The 'Αθ. π. knows nothing of Prytaneis of the Naukrari or Naukrariae at any stage. (3) The 'Αθ. π. in putting the Naukrari in line with the Demarchs of later date (c. 21, a passage already known from Harpokration, s. v. ravxpapeck), condemns the Herodotean version: for if the Naukrari corresponded to the Demarchs they could never have been on a level with the 'Archons' (though their 'principals, superior officers, might have been). It is important in this connexion to remember the respective interests of the Sources. Herodotus and Thucydides tell the story of Kylon aprepas of the text of Kylon aprepas of the text of the All maionids: Plutarch's interest in the story arises from Solon's connexion with it, as the trial and explation took place thanks to Solon's connexion with it, as the trial and explation took place thanks to Solon's connexion with its bearing on the constitutional history; no one tells the story merely on its own merits, or in the interests of Kylon.

The siege lasted some time, till the majority went home, after leaving a force on guard, and empowering the Archons to act in the matter with full authority. This vote of the exadnola is a trifle suspicious and in the later manner.

took refuge as a suppliant at the statue [of Athene Polias]. Thuc, says that Kylon and his brother made good their escape by flight (ἐκδιδράσκουσι): their followers took station as suppliants at the altar, after some of them had died of hunger.

5. οι πρυτάνιες τῶν ναυκράρων, οι περ ἔνεμον τότε τὰς 'Αθήνας. Thuc. says: τότε δὲ τὰ πολλὰ τῶν πολιτικῶν οι ἐννέα ἄρχοντες ἔπρασσον. Thue, is here certainly right prima facie against Hdt. Even if the Nauktariae and Naukrari were prae-Solonian institutions the 'Prytaneis of the Naukraties' caunot have been superior officers to the Archontes. The 'Prytaneis of the Naukrati' may have been, as Rawlinson reests, 'the chief military officers' subordinate of course to the Archontes (or rather, to the Polemarch I), a suggestion to be preferred to his alternative that they were a council or court which assisted the chief (sic) Archons in the decision of criminal causes. Another hypothesis is open. By πρετάνεις τῶν ναυκράρων may have been meant the Archons. Harpokration, indeed, points Archons. Harpokration, Intend, points to such a solution (sub v. Ναυκραρικά): ναυκραρικά): ναυκραρικά γαρ το παλαιόν του άρχουτας ελεγον, ώς εν τῷ πέμπτη Πρόδοτος δηλοί. But to this article there are three objections: (1) it looks like an inference to harmonise Holt, and Thueydides; (2) the 'Aθ, πολ identifies the ναίπραροι with the δήμαρχοι: (3) if Hdt, proves anything it is not that the ναίπραροι, lint that the mperdres T. v. = of apportes. (Reading rauxpapitor, indeed, of apertures TWP Vauxpapitur might be = of vauxpapor.) It would, however, hardly be safe to argue that the Athenian Archons had ever been known officially as rainpaper or aperances two v. Rather in the light of the articulate account of the origin of the archontic offices and titles origin of the archontic offices and titles given by the 'A0. \(\pi \), we may conclude that this passage in Hdt, is erroneous and misleading. The motive and tendency are not far to seek. The rôle assigned to the Prytaneis of the Naukrari in the narrative looks very like an attempt to absolve the (Alkmaionid) Archontes. who Thue, distinctly says were responsible for what took place (1) in virtue of the magisterial authority of the Archens at that date, (2) in virtue of a special commission ad hoc. If in this matter Thueydides had any bias, it would presumably be due to his connexion with the Philaidae.

Thue, has éc' 6. ύπεγγύους π. θ. ψ μηδέν κακόν ποιήσοισιν.

Diels, p. 10='Aθηναίων π. c. 13). It is possible that he thought of Kylon's attempt as shortly preceding the more successful stroke of Peisistratos. The date in the 'A θ . π . is indefinite, The date in the A0. \(\pi\). Is indefinite, simply placing Kylon before Solon, or perhaps Drakon, though the passage on Drakon (c. 4) is in the highest degree suspicious. Thue, gives two chronological points in the story; the synchronism with Theagenes in Megara, and the Olympiad. But these are in-sufficient by themselves. The list of Archontes also fails us. Clinton, F. H. vol. i. dates the attempt of Kylon 620 n.c. one year after the Legislation of Drakon, twenty years after the Olympian victory of Kylon himself, and twentyfour years before the purification of Epimenides and the first expulsion of the 4yes. It is possible that the comp detait and the Legislation of Drakon stood in some causal relation to each other: but if so, it is perhaps more the Legislation of Draken. So Busolt, Gr. Geschiebte, i. 510 ff. The discovery of the text of the 'A0. Took has of course confirmed Busolt's suggestion, which has also been endorsed by J. H. Wright, The Date of Cylea, Baston, 1892. But if the 'Ac. \pi. cc. 20 f. is right, the Constitution of Kleisthenes was subsequent to these acts of Kleomenes. The conduct of the unpaid Bule on this occasion is an ideal and undesigned contrast to the conduct of the paid Bule in 411 n.c. (Thue. 8. 69, 70).

The oldest cult of Athene was certainly that in the Erech-theion, and in that shrine was preserved the archaic wooden image of the goddess. It seems probable that the shrine entered It seems probable that the shrine entered by Kleomenes was the Erechtheion. It is not, however, proven that Hdt. had that temple clearly in mind in this passage. The incheate condition of the restored Erechtheion in his day might contribute to the ambiguity of the reter-ence in this passage. Had Hdt. defined exactly the temple here in question he might have specified some other great shrine of Athene on the Akropolis. Ten years ago that other shrine would have years ago that other shrine would have been identified as a matter of course with an older temple upon the site now covered by the Parthenon of Perikles, and that older temple with the Hekatompedon. But in 1885 Dr. Dörpfeld discovered the foundations of an ancient temple close to the Erechtheion (see his article Der alle Athena-Tempel auf der Akropolis in the Mittheilungen, xi. (1886), pp. 337 ff. Cp. Harrison, Muth. and Mon. pp. 496 ff.). If this 'central' temple, between the Erechtheion and the Parthenon, was standing down to the Persian wars, it would have to be reckoned with in this

73. 1. Adyvator marks presumably an net of the Ekklesia. According to π. c. 21 it is not until the fourth year after the 'regifuse' and έπ' Ίσαγόρου αρχοντος that Kleisthenes carried his legislation. If that statement be correct, and if the Archon was the Isagoras who had driven Kleisthenes out, we should have to suppose that the rival leaders and factions had come to terms again, and that the constitution of Kleisthenes was the result of a compromise. It would of course have to be dated after the events recorded ce. 74, 75 infra.

2. μεταπεμψάμενοι. Where they had taken refuge is not recorded: peradventure no farther off than Leipsydrion, ep. c. 62 supra, or Delphi. It might be too rash to suggest that they had found their way to Sardes, and prepared the way for the democratic ambassadors. But ep. 6, 125.

74. 1. περισβρίσθαι. The account in Aristophanes, l.c. c. 72 supra, is obviously exaggerated. On the previous showing of H-lt. it is hard to see that the Athenians were to blame. A Spartan king might wish, indeed, to wipe out the discredit of a failure, but the purely personal motive and personal action here ascribed to Kleomenes is not strict or adequate history. The establishment of Democracy at Athens—even in a form which in after days seemed moderatethe return of Kleisthenes, and the possibility of Athenian aggrandisement supported by Persia were reasons sufficient to set the Spartan Symmuchy in motion. That the Peloponnesian allies were not informed of the destination of the expedition is possible, though the Bosotians were in arms, από συνθήματος. Anyway, no superhuman clairvoyance surely was necessary to assign a probable object and goal. That the one king of his own initiative could have set the confederate force in motion, and carried the other king with him, is not to be admitted. To quote this story, or the story of the interview of Kleomenes and Aristagoras, as showing the power of the Spartan king(s) at the close of the sixth century, and the story of the interview of Philippides with the Ephors in 490 (6, 106) or at least the clearer case in 479 n.c. (9, 7 ff. infra), as marking the exact date at which even the military mobilisation (φρουράν φαίνεω) passed to the Ephoralty, is to betray a most naive unconsciousness of the problematic conditions under which these stories came into existence, and found their way into the work of Hdt., as well as a poor conception of the working of Spartan institutions. See further on the subject,

Appendix VII.

4. τέραννον. This is the first hint that Isagoras too was aiming at the tyranny, and it seems an afterthought. tyrahny, and it seems an orientonistic lagoras hitherto represents the oligarchic interest. His views may have developed in exile, or the afterthought may be proper to the tradition. In either case the Spartan king is credited with an intention to restore tyrange. at Athens, first in the person of Isagoras, and then in the person of Hippias (cc. 90 f. infra). The Adp. rol. makes no mention of this expedition, which broke up at Eleusis: there is no special reason why it should have mentioned an event which left the constitution intact. But it places the final legislation of Kleisthenes at this point i.e. after his return (= Hdt. c. 70) and dates it to the archontate of Isagorus (508-7 n.e.). If that representation were correct, Isagoras could not have left Athens, or must have returned, and the events recorded in this chapter would fall later still. It is, however, hardly possible to harmonise the narratives in Hdt, and in the 'At. Took. If the lattet is the better authority for the purely constitutional points, the former may be the better for the external policy and course of events. Cp. Appendix IX.

The omission of this circumstage in c. 72 is remarkable; it

2 (Aiantid, Milchhoefer, p. 31), between Marathon and Aphidnae. The co-operation of the Chalkidians suggests that this one is meant. The inference that Hysine was an Attic Deme is doubtful, Mysice was an Attic Deme is doubtful, nay highly improbable (cp. Hermann's Lehrbuch, i. ii. § 877 (1175)): this passage cannot be taken to justify it. The Demi were older than Kleisthenes (cp. 1. 50), so this passage cannot prove that his new organisation, dated in 'AO, \pi. c. 21 to 508 B.c., was already in existence: even if Hdt, were incapable of an anachronism.

Anyway, it is not from a Bocotian, or Eubocan: but the argument is hardly necessary to establish Athenian provenance. The action of the Chalkidians might seem to have been unpreconcerted; but the σύνθημα was probably passed on to them. What meanwhile were the Aiginetans about? The situation is a suspiciously exact anticipation of the situation about 446 B.C., and the tactics of the Athenians are prophetic. At the later date Aigina was quiescent, having been thoroughly subdued some ten years before (Thuc. 1. 108). Is that the reason why the Aiginetai are missing here? cp. c. 82

7. crion vópos. On the Spartan legislative procedure we are imperfectly informed. The rópos may have been passed or sanctioned by the Apella, on the proposal of the Ephors, or of the Ephors and Gerusia. Cp. ec. 39 f. supra. That the kings should have been thus amenable to the legislature been thus amenable to the legi-lature and yet, one or both, have been able and yet, one or both, have been able to levy war on whom they would, must surely seem improbable. On the date of this ropes ep. previous note. This ropes passed into general recognition, but could not be implicitly relied on (ep. Ken. in 479 B.C. Pleistarchos, however, the infant king was at home (9. 10). The two kings are despatched on a mission together 6. 73 infra, though not perhaps exicorans orparis. In cases where one king was in exile the other king would practically have been confined to Sparta, if such a 'law' had been rigidly enforced. The law would favour the employment of citizens in high military commands, especially as the occasions for such employment multiplied. But one is tempted to doubt whether there was any express enactment at this time (or later) upon this subject; whether, in fact, it had not always been the rule for one king to command at a time, and the ex-

eeption for both to be absent together.

9. τῶν Τυνδαροδων. The ξόανα of Kastor and Polydeukes. The notice preserves an interesting example of fetichism or idolatry. For further examples op. c. So infra, S. 2 ff. infra, 6. 82. Stein, indeed, argues that the law cannot have referred to the statues, or twin-statue, as its form would not admit of the one figure being separated from the other. In this case we should have here an instance of simple animism, or the invocation of ghosts. But were the figures cut out of a solid block? Is it certain they could not be separated? Or could the spirits have been detached from the idols !

(Thuc. 2. 10 ff.), is all the more remarkable in that Hdt. does elsewhere (9, 73) refer to one, and has a few references to events of the Peloponnesian war. Yet it is tempting to suppose that this list of invasions was compiled not without

5. roior Bororoior. The alliance with Plataia had probably been consummated just before this time (see 3, 108 and notes there), although Hdt. has not made mention of it, and this alliance sufficiently explains the hostility of the Bocotians. The battle took place presumably close to the Euripos. Its result, here recalled, must have been consoling to the Athenians after Koroneia. (Thuc. 1, 113.)

9. τετρακισχιλίους. 4000 kleruchs can searcely have been left there and then in possession. The establishment of a kleruchy required certain preliminaries, a dogma of the Ekklesia. the appointment of a commission, and large. Aclian, V. L. τεσσαράκοντα) and apparently quotes an inscription set up in the Agora to prove that part of the ground was let (την δέ λοιπην ερίσθωσαν). It is not clear whether the events should be all dated to the same period or divided between 506 s.c. and 445 s.c. Grote, iii. 387. regarded this klernehy as the first : but regarded this kiernehy as the first; but the discovery of the now celebrated Salaminian psephism (Mitt. des k. a. 15. και is iμi. Naturally here taken to refer to Hdt.'s autopsy, though the phrase in itself is inconclusive (cp. 4, 124, Introduction, p. lxi.). It would be interesting to determine the date of his visit (or visits) to Athens, for which unfortunately he gives no express indication. (Cp. notes infra.) The walls that still bore the marks of the Persian conflagration to the eyes of Hdt., if indeed he saw them, can scarcely have been any other walls than the fortification. By the μέγαρον turned towards the west Stein understands the Cella of the Polias temple, or Erechtheion (cp. note c. 72 supra), and identifies the site of the chains with the northern wall, which the burning of the former Erechtheron may have scorched, S. 53.

It is a wonder the Bocotians did not earry off these trophies in 480-70 n.e. 18. Socarny. If a tithe of the cancom was sufficient to make a fullsized quadriga of bronze the number of Chalkidians ransomed must have been considerable, for the Bocotian tithe would only have amounted to 2 T. 20 M. But Pausanias 1, 28, 2 represents the tithe as taken from the Boeotian as well as from the Chalkidic spoil, which is probably correct.

τὰ προπύλαια. As the great Propylaca were only completed in 438-2 n.e. this passage is generally taken to have been written after that date, and to indicate that Helt, himself was in Athens after the completion of the building. On the other hand the Aktopolis undoubtedly had Propylaes of one kind or another from time immemorial, and the mere expression is not in itself conclusive proof that the work of Mnesikles is here intended, much less that the work was complete when this passage was written. But there is a difficulty in referring the word here to carlier Propylass, seeing that Hdt. certainly lived long enough to have visited or heard tell of the great building of Mnesikles. It is possible that as originally written the passage referred to an earlier Entrance, but was left untouched, as equally applicable to the later. It may also be observed that Hdt. in describing the siege of the Akropolis in 450 B.C. speaks three times of the πέλαι (8. 61-53), but nowhere of Athenian προπύλαια save in this passage. The 'Αθην. πολ. c. 15 has τδ πρόπιλον της όκροπόλεως of the time of Peisistratos. On the Propylaca see Harrisen and Verrall, Mythology and Monu-ments, pp. 353 ff., Curtius, Stadig. pp. 147 tf.

21. 10vca. By good fortune a frag-ment of this inscription is extant, C.I.A. 1. 334, Hicks, Manual, No. 27. The character of the letters shows that the inscription is not older than about 445 s.c. It was are production of an older inscription. Cp. C. I. A. iv. 2, 3344. The whole trophy may have been a reproduction: that a bronze quadriga escaped the spoiler and the the in 180 B.c., and the 'restorer' later, seems improbable. The situation in 446-5 B.c. (Thuc. 1, 113) would account for a good deal of the interest taken in the older story, for its revival, and commemoration. That the inscription was cut in his own day is not suggested by Hdt., still less that he had ever seen the Akropolis without the Quadriga, or the Quadriga without the inscription. But then the Propylaca are mentioned in an equally casual fashion. Hdt. conceived himself to be writing history not compiling a guide book.

2. lonyopin, political equality: liberty. The symptom for the essence. Compare the account of the rise of Sparta 1. 66.

et ict. Hidt.'s logic is a little at fault. His argument goes to prove that tyranny has everywhere, even at Athens, a bad effect, but not directly that language him to mean that the Athenians were the last men in the world of whom superiority was to be expected (cp. 1. 60). The argument is interesting as (1) positing a close relation between the domestic institutions and the foreign policy and fortunes of a state, (2) ascribing military success to the democratic spirit and constitution. The first position, which is here rather implied in the particular instance than expressly formulated, became a commonplace of Greek political philosophy, and is well illustrated in Polybius' remarks on the Spartan and Roman constitutions: Bk. 6, 3 ff. The second is more disputable: and with the judgment of Helt. may be contrasted the judgment put by Thucydides into the mouth of Kleon, Rk. 3, 37, though the xparters here ascribed to the Athenians is not of course quite the same as the capacity for apxn there denied of them, as a democracy. Great military success, or at least conquest, has generally been associated with monarchic government, for obvious reasons, cp. c. 3 supra: and the success of Rome (not exactly a democracy by the way) is no real exception to the rule, regard being had to the special circumstances of the case. But success in the petty warfare of the Greek states might well go to the most high-spirited body of citizen-soldiers; whether ianyopia could acquire or maintain an empire was another question.

5. 1θελοκάκεον κτλ. This passage reads rather like an economical than like a political formula. It is to be remembered that, although here are so clearly stated the effects of servitude and freedom respectively on labour, the ancient world never rose to the application of this principle to demestic and predial slavery. Ancient writers tended to isolate the political from the economical problem, as some moderns have isolated the economic from the political. The Asopides fathered B.c., 9, 69. The Asopides fathered upon these streams were numerous. Apollodoros, Bibliotheca 3, 12, 6, ascribes two sons and twenty daughters to Asopos. Beside the two here named the most important would be Korkyra. This at least was the Phliasian view: cp. Pausanias 2. 5, 2, the Phliasians claiming all three nymphs for their own

The decline of Argos was accompanied and perhaps in part caused by the emancipation of Aigina, which may probably be connected with the fall of the tyrannis. The Thulassokratia of Aigina is dated by C. O. Miller (Acgineticorum Libre, p. 88), following and emending Caster, for the twenty years antecedent to the psephism of Themistokles (7, 144), but the date is artificial. The odes of The date is artificial. The odes of Pindar composed for private Aiginetan patrons—there are eleven extant, fulling between 401-450 s.c. (cp. formal notice, (2) an implacable war (dπουδος καl ἀκήρωκτος), (3) an irregular guerilla war. The theory, partly based upon this passage, that all wars in Greek history were formally 'declared' is exaggerated: a similar theory obtained in regard to modern times, until disproved by Colonel J. F. Maurice's official pamphlet, Hostilities without Declaration of War, London, 1883.

The feud begins according to Hdt, in a feeling of hostility from the Aiginetans to the Athenians. εs 'Αθηναίους έκ τῶν Αίγινηrew (c. 32), and ends by an exθρη of the Athenians to the Aiginetans, της πρός Αίγινητας Αθηναίοις (υ. 89). The άρχη της έχθρης is obviously conceived as long prior to the πόλεμος απήρυκτος of 506 B.C. or later. It would be interesting to determine its date, if possible. If we were dealing with a tradition free from anachronisms, and of historical contents, we should be taken back to an age when statues were made of wood; when no olives were to be found save in Attica; when Aigina was still subject to Epidauros; when Athenian women still wore the woollen Dorian tunic à la Corinthicane, not having yet adopted the χιτών ποδήρης or λίνεσε. There are genuine archaic notes in the story (the wooden &bara, the primitive divinities, and a dim memory of relations between Athens and Epidauros): there are equally obvious anachronisms (the trireme, the system of jurisdiction, the constitutional terminology, perhaps the votive offerings). But the archaic notes are so to speak material, while the anachronisms concern merely points of expression or form. The supernatural touches, the motive of which is apparent, enhance the value of the story, or rather of the versions. Possibly the rivalry of Athens and Aigina went back to prae-Dorian days, when both were members of the Kalaurian Amphiktyony; and the break up of that Confederation, the Derivation of Aigina, of Epidauros, of Argos, and the secession and survival of Ionian Athens may underlie or colour the tradition. Cp. Appendix VIII.
4. IRACEUE. Whether this behest is an Apolline response, or carries us back to the days when the Pythia was the prophet of the πρωτόμαντις Γαία (Aischyl. Eumen. 2) is an open question.

Δαμίη and Αυξησίη are food for speculation. Δαμία Plakesley takes as equivalent to Δά μαΐα = Δαμάτηρ. Rawlinson agrees. Stein connects Damia with dau, δαμάω, Auxesia with affer, and describes the two as agricultural deities (of labour and increase), personifications of the two sides in Demeter: which of course is much the same as Rawlinson's identification of the two with 'Ceres and Pres-erpine.' Bachr's explanation of Δαμία as the people's goddess seems absurd, though no doubt Demeter, like Dionyses, and other rural deities, is eminently popular, and democratic (cp. 8. 65); etymologically, however, there may be a connexion between δήμος and Δημία (cp. L. & S. sub v. δήμος). Λ more fantastic etymology explains δαμία (Kretan βημία) as the destructive, αὐξεσία as the productive Demeter. Damia was known to the Romans, and identified with the Bona Dea, and the cult of the latter was probably affected by the identification. Paulus, p. 68, damium sacrificium, quod fiebat in operto in honorem Bonae Deac . . . dea quoque ipsa Damia et sacerdos ejus damiatrix appellabatur, quoted in Roscher, Lexicon, 943. There was a festival at Tarentum called Δάμεια, Hesych. sub v. The etymology of αὐξησία is pretty plain. In any case we have a pair of Chthonian divinities, worshipped with orginstic rites, and particularly connected with Epidauros, Treezen, Attica, Old Delphi, Krete, Aigina, Tarentum, and the west. Cp. further, Roscher, Lexicon, sub vv.

Cp. further, Rosener, Lexicon, suo vr. 9. λέγιται. Perhaps by the Athenians (cp. c. 85 infra) who, not content with having the holiest, wanted to have the only olive trees. The formula suggests a doubt, cp. c. 42 supra, 4. 181. 12. τῆ 'Αθηναίη .. τῷ 'Ερχθέι. In the Erechtheion on the Akropolis was the olive tree which according to the Athenia.

12. τη 'Αθηναίη... τῷ 'Εριχθί. In the Ercehtheion on the Akropelis was the olive tree which according to the Athenians had been set there as a witness or protest by Athene against Poseidon, 8. 55. Ercehtheus (father of Oreithyia and so father-in-law to Boreas, 7. 189) once king, and specially king of the 'Athenians' (8. 44), of the earth earthy (8. 55), associated with Athene Polias on the Akropelis under the form of a snake (cp. 8. 41), though real history was, doubtless, condensed round his name, may well have been originally of the Chthonian and arval order, or at least have had a symbolical significance of that kind. Athene too upon some sides is undoubtedly a rural goddess, or at least has important relations to climate and seasons, and especially the olive crop. Cp. Curtius, States, p. 35. These relations are displayed in the Calendar of Festivals: Skirophoria, Plynteria, Panathenaea, etc. (Cf. A. Mommsen, Heortologie, and Roscher, Loz. 683.) But these could hardly be the primary or prominent aspects of Athene Polias; and offerings to the Polias and the King suggest more than a merely physico-religious homage. On Erechtheus, ep. Harrison and Verrall, ep. cit. xlvii. ff. Cp. also notes c. 72 supra. 14. ποιησάμενοι, c. 77 supra. 83. 1. Αlγενήται Έπεδαυρίων ήκουον.

The supremacy of Argos over Aigina would be easier to understand. Drd Epidauros succeed to some of the Argive power (on the fall of the Temenids)? Or is the Epidaurian overlordship a false inference from the fact that to get to Argos the men of Ai, ina would go to Epidauros? In the days of Periandros there was a tyrannis in Epidauros (3, 50-52) which succumbed to the Corinthan, and this event might have promoted the growth of Aiginetan power.

There is no reference in Hdt. to Asklepios and his cult.

real indication of the epoch or state of the government (note to c. $2 supra). Cp. 6.50. On the story which follows Rawlinson remarks that similar stories are frequent in Pausanias; see 1. 18, 2 (madness of Agraulos and Herse in consequence of an act of disobedience-not a close parallel); 3. 16, 6 (sc. 9), madness produced by the Stavov of Artemis Orthias at Sparta; 7. 19, 3 μφυμα έξ Αρτέμιδος for a sacrilege. He compares also the tale in Athenaeus p. 672 E, the attempted rape of the statue (βρέτας) of Hera from Samos, and the marvel by which it was prevented—a good parallel, though the Samian story might be merely a fiction to explain the ritualistic washing of the image (ep. Athenian Plynteria). R. adds the story of the preservation of Delphi, 8. 37, which offers many points of comparison. Such coincidences explain the genesis and discredit the truth of all the narratives alike: nor can any higher probability be claimed for the eldest of the series, when it involves physical absurdities. (Cp. the story cc. 17 ff. supra in which case no physical inepti-tudes are involved.)

86. 5. our exours. As if Hdt. had cross-questioned some Aiginetaus on the subject! He may, however, be repeating Athenian criticism. He seems to prefer the Athenian version, as he points out carefully two weak spots in the Aiginetan, and fails to suggest that the other had been dictated by Athenian pride, which preferred to ascribe a defeat to the δαιμόνιον rather than to the men of Argos or Aigina. The case well illustrates one canon of Greek history, as made by the Greeks themselves.

Greeks themselves.

11. ἐμοὶ μἐν κτλ. One of Hdt.'s tolerant formulae. Cp. Introduction, § 22.

12. γούνατα. The ξόανα presumably were kneeling figures, and their attitude lent itself to this interpretation. The βρέταs of Hera (Athenaeus, Ł.c. supra) not being a kneeling figure became miraculously heavy, and so defeated the intention of the robbers. Cp. c. 88 infra.

18. if Ἐπιδαύρου. The Dorian states Argos, Epidauros, Aigina appear in league against Athens: for, if Epidauros had been at the time friendly to Athens, the Athenians would probably have had news of the Argive movement, if it had not have altered the first trated.

187. 4. 'Apycio. The appearance of the Argives as the authority for the story at this point may be due to the fact that the destruction of the Attie force on land was especially the work of the Argives. It might be conjectured that the Aiginature were engaged at sea, and that their Peloponness an allies undertook operations on shore. One survivor in a battle might more or less easily make his way from place to place on dry land (ep. 1. 82 case of Othryades: and the no less immortal case of Dr. Brydon the one survivor who reached Jellalabad from Calmi in 1842); but it would be interesting to know how the one Athenian made his way across the water from Aigina to Attiea, unless he was actually sent by the enemy to bear the news (κομαθείτ Δρα & τ λε τ λθήρα).

ins way across the water from Aigna to Attiea, unless he was actually sent by the enemy to bear the news (κομαθείς άρα ἐς τὰς 'Αθήρας).

11. lματίων. The himation properly so called was an upper garment, for outloor wast, and it is doubtful whether it was ever fastened with pins or brooches icp. Blummer in Baumerster's Denkumber, e. v.); and, by the way, the reference in L. & S. suh v. περέκη to Sophokles

O. T. 1269 is not to the point, seeing that the garment or garments (cipara) there mentioned need not have included an himation. In any case luarter here can searcely stand for κιθώνων, unless Helt. is to be charged with supernormal laxity. It is more probable that he slipped in regard to the historical evolution of feminine apparel than as to the correct use of ordinary terms for various articles as worn in his own time. But cp. next note but one, c. 92 n infra and 1. 9. By tharter he here in any case probably means out-deer garments, which he supposes were formerly secured by brooches : and just below he argues, rather loosely, that the long linen chiton was substituted for the short woollen chiton in the dress of Athenian women, in order that pins and brooches might be discarded altogether.

88. 2. To TWY YUVALKWY TOYOU. An act worthy of Lemmians (see 6, 138). But for the horror of the Athenians, and the consequent change of fashion, it might have been suspected that this act of the women was historical, and even the execution of a judicial sentence. In any case the fate of this nameless Athenian torms a remarkable parallel, by anticipation, to the lynching of Lykedas in 479 p.c. as narrated 9. 5. For the latter only the men were responsible; and no horror seems to lave been felt.

μετέβαλον αὐτέων ἐς τὴν Ἰάδα ἐφόρεον γὰρ δὴ πρὸ τοῦ αἱ τῶν 5 ᾿Λθηναίων γυναῖκες ἐσθῆτα Δωρίδα, τῆ Κορινθίη παραπλησιωτάτην μετέβαλον ὧν ἐς τὸν λίνεον κιθῶνα, ἵνα δὴ περόνησι μὴ χρέωνται. ἔστι δὲ ἀληθέι λόγω χρεωμένοισι οὐκ Ἰὰς αὔτη ἡ ἐσθὴς τὸ παλαιὸν ἀλλὰ Κάειρα, ἐπεὶ ἢ γε Ἑλληνικὴ ἐσθὴς πᾶσα ἡ ἀρχαίη τῶν γυναικῶν ἡ αὐτὴ ἢν τὴν νῦν Δωρίδα καλέομεν. το τοῖσι δὲ ᾿Λργείοισι καὶ τοῖσι Αἰγινήτησι καὶ πρὸς ταῦτα [ἔτι τόδε ποιῆσαι] νόμον εἶναι παρά σφισι ἐκατέροισι τὰς περόνας ἡμιολίας ποιέεσθαι τοῦ τότε κατεστεῶτος μέτρου, καὶ ἐς τὸ ἰρὸν τῶν θεῶν τουτέων περόνας μάλιστα ἀνατιθέναι τὰς γυναῖκας, ᾿Αττικὸν δὲ

4. ἐφόρεον. The history of woman's dress here indicated is simple. Originally all Hellenic women wore vestments of the same stuff and pattern, viz. of woollen stuff and fastened with pins, clasps, or brooches; subsequently the long Karian linen chiton was introduced by the Ionians (presumably from Asia) and adopted by the Athenians; the two types were then contrasted as Ionian and Dorian.

As a native of an Ionised Doric colony in Karia Hdt. ranks as a good authority on this subject; but it must be questioned whether his historical sketch is either complete or accurate. Only by an undue restriction of the term Hellenic could the primitive dress of Hellenic women be identified with the Dorian chiton: the Homeric Peplos, the representation of the under garment on early vases, resembles rather the long (Ionian) chiton. Nor is it quite clear whether Hdt, is speaking of the upper or under garment, or of both: though in c. 87 the mepapai are taken from the luaria. (Blumner, in Baumeister's Denkmaler, p. 786, seems to identify Hdt.'s Iono-Karian raiment with a costume made up of two garments, while evidently sceptical as to the correctness of Hdt.'s statement.) Nor does it appear that the long (linen) chiton always dispensed with περόναι, and in any case the statement that the Athenians adopted the long chiton in order to get rid of the περόναι τῶν Ιματίων is somewhat inconsequent. It is to be observed that Thucvdides, a better authority for Athenian fashions, has a complementary note on the history of men's dress at Athens, 1. 6. The men had recently given up wearing the oldfashioned linen chiton and adopted the Dorian. Thucydides seems to imply that the so-called 'Ionian' chiton was properly 'Attic': on this point Hdt. is probably nearer the truth. This passage has of course extraordinary interest as the oldest extant deliberate essay on the history of Greek dress, a subject into the earlier chapters of which historic light has but lately fallen. The evidence now available is mainly the archaic pottery (Mykennean and early Attic), and goes to show, inter alia, that Hdt.'s account of the matter is much too simple. Nor can it well be supposed that it was on a careful examination of such evidence that his account was based. For the recent growth of knowledge in this department ep. Blümner, in Hermann's Lehrluch, iv. 18 21, 22 (1882), Helbig, Das Honerische Lyos, 1884 (2nd Ed. 1887), Boehlau, Quaestiones de re ustiaria Graecerum. 1883, Studniczku, Beitrage z. 11. νόμον. There are three customs here stated to have been instituted in consequence of this feud with Athens: (1) their largement of the pins, (2) the practice of offering these large pins to Damia and Auxesia, (3) the exclusion of Attic ware from the cult. The last may possibly be an understatement and pseudo-explanation of a commercial measure or custom for the protection of native wares from Attic competition. The pins or brooches were no doubt common offerings to the goddesses perhaps before marriage (Stein eps. 4, 34) or childbirth. (Hence the kneeling posture of the figures. Welcker as quoted by Stein refers to the kneeling Elleith via at Tegea, Pausan. 8, 48, 7, and the description of Leto, Hymn. ad Apoll. 117.) The ritualistic facts are probably correct: the reasons given therefor highly suspicious.

5. $\hat{\gamma}$\text{Abc.} Not surely spontaneously, but in answer to their inquiries. But is the oracle correctly dated? The cult of Aiakos is suggestive of Philaid auspices: the actual date of the conquest of Aigina is 450 m.c. (Thuc. 1. 108). Thirty one years from that date earries us back to 486-7 n.c. the probable date of the great Aiginetan war, misplaced by Hdt. ingra, 6. 87 ff. See notes there. It does not seem likely that the shrine of Aiakos in the Agora, seen by Hdt., was a survival from the prace-Persian days. For some thirty years after 487 n.c. the Athenians and Aiginetans were at peace. The oracle here preserved belongs presumably to a date just about the time when Athens was at war with Aigina (Epiduros and Corinth), when Kimon perhaps was in exile, and his recall being agitated. A descendant of Aiakos was the proper man to bring the Aiginetans to reason. Kimon was probably not recalled till after the Egyptian disaster in 455 n.c. (C. Peter, Zeitafelne, ad ann. 457-6, dates his recall before the fall of Aiakos in the events and interests of the older εχερα.

8. χρησμοί. These oracles, if authentic, would seem to imply that, under the Peisistratids, Athens was already entering into competition with Sparta, or at least looking forward thereto. Or were these oracles—'left in the temple by the Peisistratidae'—intended to alarm the Spartans and promote just such a reaction as is here described! That they were not of Delphie origin is obvious. On Peisistratid piety cp. c. 58 supra, and as a later example of a prophecy of similar content cp. 8, 141, later, that is, unless the oracle there cited belong to the date of Athenian overtures to the

91. 4. νόφ λαβόντες ώς. This sentence, ascribing a truly Machiavellian policy and morality to the Lakeda-monians, is more in the mode of Thucydides. It can hardly be an uninspired observation on the part of Hdt., still less one suggested by a Spartan source. It is, perhaps, an Athenian view, and contrasts with the taunt of dμαθία πρός τὰ ξω πράγχιατα brought against the Spartons by the Corinthian orator in Thuc. 1. 63. A small oligarchy, indeed, Sparta pre-ferred to the tyrannis, as she showed abundantly in the Peloponnesian war and thereafter; but her essential objection to the tyrannis was strictly local. for Laconia, or at most Pelopointeses, and did not extend to Attica, Sicily, or Maccelon, much less to merely 'barbarous' untions.

3. τάδε. The contrast between Hdt, and Thue,, and the types of almost contemporaneous culture which they respectively represent, is nowhere more conspicuous than in the speeches introduced in their several narratives. Even in his speeches Hdt, does not always cease to be a story-teller (ep. 6. 86), nor his style decline from the circulary λέξει, least of all in this, his longest oration. A certain air of authenticity is lent to the passage by the introduction of the speaker's name; but that this device is no final guarantee is proved by the parallel case of the speeches 3. 80 ff. That Sokles is an historical person need not be doubted, still less that the Corinthians on this occasion led the atmenticing to Search.

A Corinthian can hardly be supposed to be pleading the cause of democracy as such. Cp. looppoply as used c. 78 supra, loovouly 3. 142. The conduct of the Cerinthians themselves did not always correspond to the liberal sentiments here ascribed to them. Cp. their restoration of Evarches at Astakos in 431 n.c., Thue. 2. 33. 11. τυράννων άπειρο. The Spartans in their own case had almost as little (and as late) experience of the Tyrannis as the Corinthians of Democracy. Not antil the days of the usurping adventurers, Lykurgos, Machanidas and Nabis (to waive the cases of Agis IV. and Ileomenes III.), did the Tyrannis technically occupy Sparta. Cp. Plass, Die "grannis (1859), ii. pp. 171 ff., C. Peter, Gr. Zeitterfelm, ad ann. 195-192 n.c. But the Spartans, of course, knew perfectly well the reputed and the real effects of Tyranny, and for that very reason were anxious to avoid it at home, and to re-establish it in Athens; c. 91 supra.

12. Φυλάσσοντες κτλ. This was undeubtedly one of the guiding principles of Spartan policy, for the danger was there. Hence the treatment of Rleomenes, Pausanias, perhaps Leotychides and others. Hence, indeed, the very maintenance of the dual kingdom. The remark of the speaker implies that the Spartans had knowledge of the nature of the Tyrannis, even if they had no empirical knowledge, and thus renders his subsequent narrative superfluons. But the whole argument is beside the point: the Corinthian had to show that it was against Sparta's interests to establish a Tyrant in Athens; this he fails, he does not even attempt, to do—except in so far as his attitude shows the hostility of Corinth to the Spartan proposal. The fact probably is that Hdt. takes occasion to put on record a good story, or rather three good stories (1) the preservation of Kypselos, (2) the advice of Thrasybulos, (3) the ghost of Melissa.

The work at Olympia has now been brought down to the beginning of the sixth century, and if rightly so can have had nothing to say to Kypselos or the Kypselos. Still Hdt. may have seen it, and heard the story he tells in connexion with it, possibly on route for Sicily (cp. 4. 29, 30, 195. Introduction, p. xev.). The story in Nie. Damase. 56 explains the connexion with Olympia; Action conveys the child to Olympia for safety. There was a statue of Zeus at Olympia connected with the family, cp. Pausan. 5. 2, 3, Suidas, sub v. During his long reign the tradition preserved by Ephoros(apud Nic. Damasc.) represents him as a wise and popular ruler, specially concerned in colonisation (Leukas, Anaetorion, Ambrakia). Cp. Oberhummer, Akarnanien*, pp. 71 ff., Busolt, Gr. G. i.2 641 ff. The conventional date is 655-625 n.c. calculated back from Periandros. See Clinton, Fast. Hell. i. 208. It is not the Many but the Few who object to a 'one-man' power. As Periandres was a Sage (Diog. L. 1. 24, ep. πέμψαντικτλ. The nectomantic ance-

That left to the S.P.R. to determine. That Periandros practised necromancy is not in itself incredible; but the story here is discredited by its obviously designed tendency to damn the tyrant's memory.

113. Karékate. That the garments had to be burnt in order to be of use to the ghost is an idea entirely consonant with animistic beliefs. See Tylor, Primitive Culture, i. 421. The suggestion that Periandres wanted to get the gold off the ladies clothing (Blakesley and Rawliuson) misses this point, and sacrifices the unity of the story. It is of course possible that various acts of Perimitros have been 'contagminated' and confused by Herodotus, or his source. The tyrant may have burnt some clothes to supply his wife's ghost with a ghostly wardrobe. He may have confiscated ornaments and clothing to enrich his ornaments and clothing to enrich his own treasury. According to Diog. Laert. Periandros burnt his παλλοκίδει, to appease his wife, and plundered the ladies of Corinth, teste Ephero, to get gold for an ex vato, in honour of an Olympian victory. Diog. L. 1, p. 25. The notion of extracting gold from a funeral pyre recurs in the unworthy insinuation levelled at Cato's memory by Julius Caesar. See Plutarch, Cat. min. 11 nd fin. κοσκίνη την τέφραν τοῦ νεκροῦ μετέβαλε καὶ διήθησε χροῦιον ζητῶν καταμετέ, δαλε και διήθησε χρυσίου ζητών κατα-ACAILLIPERON.

120. οῦκων κτλ. The asyndeton is rhetorical; cp. 4. 118 supra.

That Sokles, or Sosikles, of Corinth addressed to the Spartans and Peloponnesian allies the speech here put into his mouth is simply incredible. It contains little to the point, and it omits nearly everything that might have been said upon such an occasion. The Corinthians, and others, are opposed to the restoration of the Peisistratidae in Athens. Their main motive, which probably was a desire to have a counterweight to Sparta, or at least to Aigina, a reluctance to see Athens pledged to Spartan policy and supremacy, could not of course be stated openly: but what has the story of the childhood of Kypselos to say to the argument? That story is calculated to excite sympathy for the hero, and is a non sequitur in the mouth of Sokles. Was all that follows news to Sparta? Was it to the point? It consists of two anecdotes which, though not wholly devoid of bearing on the speaker's argument, are not expressly related to it, or to each other. The inconsistency of Sparta's hostility to the tyrannis at home, and friendship to the tyrant of Athens, was a good rhetorical point, which the Spartans had already ac hypothesi fully discounted in their own minds, c. 91 supera. It might have been put much more strongly, if Sparta's own action in the suppression of the tyranny at Corinth and elsewhere had been mentioned. (Plutarch, Mor. 859 =de maliy. Hdt. 21.) The argument that oligarchies would serve Sparta better than tyrannies would have required clearer statement. Viewed as a dram-atic argument this speech is a failure, and an improbability: viewed as a triad of anecdotes, each good in itself, it is a miracle of logography.

at Eleusis c. 75 supra, the opposition on this occasion, the support against Aegina 6, 89, are all dictated by one and the same self-interest and policy. It was the action not the principles of Corinth, which underwent a sudden conversion in the light of the Themistoklean development, and remained hostile to Athens, from before the battle of Salamis (cp. 8. 59, 61, etc.) until the close of the Peloponnesian war (Xen. Hell. 2. 2, 19); after which the great commercial oligarchy, alarmed by the expansive ambition of Sparta, took side again with Athens, and promoted the Athenian revival (Diodoros 14, 82, Grote, Pt. 11, c. laxiv.), not without fresh danger to it-

But the appeal (ememaprepearto) if not the shout (owrh, cp. 4, 129) might seem to imply something articulate. posed to give the title.

The conquest and occupation of a stronghold in the Troad by Peisistratos was something more than a foreign investment against a miny day: it looks like a part of a great policy which aimed at converting the Aegean into an Athenian lake, or at least an Ionian lake under Athenian lead, and runs on all fours with the kleruchy in Salamis (ep. note e. 77 supra), the friendship in Eretria (1. 64), the purification of Delos

(1. 64), the client-monarchy in Naxos (1. 64), the founder's kinship in Miletos (c. 65 supra), the connexions with Thrace (l. 64); a policy carried on by his sons in the colonisation of the Chersonese (6, 39), the alliance with Lampakes (Thue, 6, 59), although the latter is rather traced by Thucydides to the new necessities created by the murder of Hipperchos, and the rise of the Persian power, as further shown in the next chapter inira. How the alliances with Argos, with Spatta, with Thessaly, were related, in time and causality, to the colonial and maritime ambitions of Peisistratid Athens, need not here be discussed. He has transferred an event, his authority for which may have been the poem of Alkaies, from the first war between Athens and Lesbos in the days of Periandros and Solon, about 600 mc., to the second or renewed war, in the days of Peisistratos, at least half a century later; and he has concluded the second war, in the days of l'eisistrates. or rather of his sons, by the award of Periandres, which probably closed the first. The first war in fact has dis-appeared altogether from Hdt.'s view, and its traditions have been utilised for the story of the second war, which is thus made to appear the only war. The case is instructive as showing the way in which the chronological perspective have been a considerable place in the sixth and seventh centuries n.c. It was a member of the Hellenion at Naukratis (2. 178), but its power was presumably weakened by the civic strife, only terminated by the altripopola of Pittakos (Arist. Pol. 3. 14, 8 ff. 12854), c. 590-570 n.c. (Co. Flach. these dec. 6r. Lyrik, pp. 465 ft.) It is more astonishing to find the Athenians attempting to colonise the Troad, before they were secure of Salamis. Flach I.c. regards the colony as undertaken by the Attic nobility to indemnify the People for the severity of the new (Drakontic) code. It is rather to be connected with the economic and social condition with the economic and social condition of prac-Solonian Attica, described in 'Ac. moA. c. 2. The award of Periandros is dated 590 n.c. (Flach). For the fragment of Alkaiovsee Bergk, Post. It has been very variously dated. See Hicks, Manual (1882), No. 7. Roberts, Greek Engraphy (1887), No. 42, and pp. 331 ff., follows Kirch-

6. 121 infra. 8. δ Κυψέλου. Hdt. would hardly have given the patronymic spontaneously here, after c. 92. He found it in his sources, or the passages did not originally run as at present. That Athenians and Lesbians should refer their differences to Periandros would ill square with the moral of that speech.

6. Σάρδις. The Athenians had long known the way to Sardes, Solon had been there 1. 29, Alkmaion (!) had been there 6. 125 (see note ad L.). There had just been a previous appeal to had just been a previous appeal to Artaphrenes for assistance against Sparta, c. 73 supra, for we need not identify the embassics in this and that chapter. The application of Hippias at Sardes associated his restoration with a foreign and oriental overloadship. The 'tyrannis' was now to be in Athens, and in Greece proper, identified not so much with the rise of the conquered Hellenie or prac-Hellenie masses, as with the loss of autonomy, with sub-

7. νομίζουσε like διαβάλλεω ἰκέτα

is a little clumsy after the opening of the chapter. Van Herwerden would bracket is . . . einsau as spurious, and roud raird.

8. οί Μιλήσιοι τῶν 'Αθηναίων είσι втоког. Assuming the authenticity of the tradition that this statement formed one of Aristagoras' arguments at Athons. we have here the earliest definite recognition of the supposed metropolitan char-acter of Athens. The conception, however, goes back to the time and policy of Peisistratos, and the use mode of traditions for his purposes. Cp. c. 65 supra. That the idea was, to say the least, an exaggeration, a systematisation of more or less authentic tradition seems probable, cp. 1. 146. The lonian city which under Peisistratos had been raise which there recisively had been at the primary was made the mother of all the rest. Cp. the additation of There. Kyrene, Tarentum upon Derian Sparta (4. 147 supra). (Solon had represented Attica as peaphrárm youar lacrias, Ath. Const. 5.)

10. ούδὲν ὅ τι οἰκ, including money of course, and surely not less than the fifty talents, which he had offered Kleomene e. 51 supra. Cp. c. 103 infra. He could not exactly bribe the Ekklesia wholesale, but he might offer to guarantee the expenses of the expedition.

11. πολλούς γώρ κτλ. This remark

η ενα, εὶ Κλεομένεα μὲν τὸν Λακεδαιμόνιον μοῦνον οὐκ οἰός τε εγένετο διαβάλλειν, τρεῖς δὲ μυριάδας 'Αθηναίων ἐποίησε τοῦτο. 'Αθηναῖοι μὲν δὴ ἀναπεισθέντες ἐψηφίσαντο εἴκοσι νέας ἀποστεῖλαι

is a glaring instance of the political naticels of fielt. He evidently regards the help given by Athens to the Ionic revolt as a colossal blunder, and the refusal of Sparta as a piece of sound policy. He does not, indeed, expressly say that the Athenians comtemplated a march to Susa, and the terms of the psephism (είκοσι νέας άποστείλαι βοηθούς Ίωσι) rather imply the contrary. But all the same he represents the Athenians as puppets in the hands of the adroit and plausible Milesiau. Yet Hdt. has himself already recorded two diplomatic passages between Sardes and Athens which plainly portended a war: ec. 73, 96 supra. The Milesian recognition of the metropolitan claim of Athens here explicitly made was also something not to be despised. A great opportunity was indeed offered to Athens. Her action anticipated and probably facilitated the formation of the Delian confederacy in 476 n.c. (cp. 9, 106). It was, moreover, an act of self-defence: against Hippias and against the Mede. A Themistokles would certainly have approved it. If the Athenians made a approved it. If the Athenans made a mistake it was not in supporting the Ionian movement but in afterwards deserting it. On Hdt.'s own showing the compusst of Greece was already projected (2. 134), and his whole history goes to prove that such an attempt was inevitable. Blakesley suggests that the passage is "a note from a semewhat later hand." If we have to delike every surface in Hdt. to are to obelise every sentence in Hdt. to which material objection may be taken, how much will be left? The remark is certainly not Athenian. It is a venture of Helt,'s own, or perhaps a suggestion of his Spartan sources; easier to impose on thirty thousand Athenians than on one Lake laemonian! For an ill-omened Athenian estimate of the value of 'one Lakonian cloak' ep. Plutarch, Nikias, c. 19 (quoted by Freeman, Sicily, iii.

τρεῖς μυριάδας 'Αθηναίων. 'Thirty thousand' is the conventional maximum for the Athenian census in Hdt.'s own day. It has generally been regarded as an exaggeration, the census for 444 B.C. being fixed-on the strength of the Scholisst to Aristoph. Wasys 716, quoting Philocheros—at 19,000, or rather at 14,240 (Piut. Per. 37). In regard, however, to this lower estimate the consideration has been overlooked, that the figure is not the total number of citizens, but the total number who applied for a corn dole, and is exclusive therefore of the first two Solonian Tiuhuara at least. positively certain number is the 21,000 of the year 317 n.c., though even this figure looks suspiciously round. Proba-bilities are all in favour of a higher figure for Periklean, and indeed for Kleisthenean Athens, even though Kleisthenes did not admit "all (sic) the foreign inhabitants (ξένοι μέτοικοι) and entranchised slaves of the same rank (δοίλοι μέτοικοι) into the number of citizens" (R.). That the number 30,000 is quite conventional is shown by such passages as Aristoph. Ekkles. 1182 (where it might include the women); Plate, Sympos. 3, of the audience in the theatre; Hdt. 8, 65, of the Eleusinian procession, which was not confined to Athenian citizens, Stein traces the figure to a confusion between the number of Athenian citizens (circa 20,000) and the number of Athenian soldiers (citizens+10,000 metics) on the strength of Thue. 2. 13. But Thue, is there giving the real number of hoplites in 431 n.c. and an allowance must be made for those adult citizens who were not hoplites. The whole question has been most satisfactorily treated by Beloch, Pic Recelbering der griechusch-romischen Welt, Leipzig 1886, Capitel iii. Beloch regards 30,000 as roundly correct for the beginning of the century, and would augment it by 5000 to obtain the figure for 431 n.c. English readers will find the retriences in Clinton, Fast. Hell. ii. p. 476, ep. also Boeckh, Hauskaltung i. pp. 44 ff. In any case that 30,000 citizens ever supported one psephisma, or even supported one psepinstin, of even attended one meeting, is not likely. Even for a νόμοτ ἐπ΄ ἀνόρι (000 stood conventionally for πάντεν 'Αθηταίοι. (Cp. M. orparnyor amostiavres. This special appointment of a single Strategos, or commander in chief, is of some or commander-in-clies, is of some constitutional importance, at a date when the ordinary Strategi were still probably elected by, from, and for the Phylae. Cp. 'Aθ. πολ. c. 22, and Appendix 1X. § 13. It can hardly have been an accident that the Athenian Strategos on this service bore the name of Melanthios. A Melanthos is the father of Kodros, Cp. c. 65 supra, and the Ionian founders of Miletos, like the Peisistratidae themselves, were traced to the same ancestry,

16. ἀρχὴ κακῶν, 'a source of woes' (not with Grote inaccurately "the beginning of the mischiefs," iii. p. 499). In any case the phrase is an exaggeration, used with epic force to dramatise the story. The grammatical distinction between επηγελλοντο δκως ᾶν ἀπέλθοιεν and έποίεε δκων βασιλέα λυπήσειε ('he was acting with a view to injure the king') supra, is observable, δκων ἀν implying a condition ('occasione data'), bus by itself indicating the intention, pure and simple. etc., Pars prior, p. 39 (1883).
21. Δορίσκον. Blakesley points out that Doriskos was at this time held by a Persian garrison. Cp. 7, 59. If the fugitives were landed at Doriskos they must have been in force. Even so, it is surprising to hear nothing of any action. Is this story of the escape of the Paionians correctly dated? If they handed at Doriskos, it was probably after the revolt of the Heliespont (c. 103 infra). Is it genuine history t A former stery of the Paionians (cc. 12, 13) is open to suspicion, and the wholesale transporta-tion (c. 15) perhaps exaggerated. There tion (c. 15) perhaps exaggerated. There were evidently 'Paioniaus' in Phrygia in Helt.'s own day (of δέ τινες αδρα και κατέμεναν), but the greater part in Europe. Helt. here implies that the Europe. Hdt. here implies that the Asiatic Paionians were a colony, so to speak, from Europe. Elsewhere he preserves the tradition, or theory, that Threese had been invaded from Asia (7. 20); a theory for which much may be said. (Cp. Giseke, Thrakisch-Pelasyische Stranne, pp. 2 ff.) Yet it would be rather too much to suppose that the whole story here told is simply an effort to explain the appearance of raionians on both sides of the Acgean. Whence does Hdt. derive it! There seems no internal indication to determine seems no internal indication to determine between an Asiatic and a European, between oral and written sources. The story here supplies a neat literary link, and perhaps answers or anticipates a possible objection to the story of the transportation told above. Aristagoras himself afterwards ian away to Thrace, to Myrkinos on the Strymon, and met his end while besieging a Thracian town, c. 126 infra. His route is not there given, but Doriskos cannot have been his point of landing; and for these Paionians, who wished to gain the Strymon, to land at the Hebros seems a curious proceeding. (On the geography of Thrace, between these two rivers, cp. 7. 108-113.)

99. 1. tracky. Presumably in the spring (408 n.c.), cp. Appendix V. Twenty ships was no inconsiderable force for the Athens of that day, being nearly a moiety of the fleet (50 sail), and the same number as was borrowed from Coninth for the Aiginetan war, 6, 82.
On the possible connexion cp. Appendix VIII. § 2.
2. dydacor. The Athenian Strategos had perhaps a superior authority over the liretrian contingent, notwithstanding the assertion of independent action (οῦ τῆρ ἀθηναίων χαριν). Eretria supplied only seven tritemes to the national only seven trinemes to the national fleet at Artemision and at Salamis in 480 n.c. Cp. 8, 1, 46. But the town had been severely hamiled by the l'ersians in 400 n.c., 6, 101.

οὐ τὴν 'Αθηναίων χάριν looks almost like an express contradiction of an Athenian claim, or at least of the chair that any like the salary of the chair that any like the salary of the salary

Eretria, with their respective ullies, which according to Thueydides (1. 13) rose to Panhellenic proportions, and alone of wars deserved mention between the Trojan and the Persian. Like the Peloponnesian war it was a war of divided Hellas, nay, of divided Ionia. Eretria, Athens, Miletes and their confederates (ep. 6, 21) seem to have had the worst of it. The interests at stake were probably commercial, but the duel between the two principals was fought out with cavalry on the Lelantian plain, and the Thessalians secured victory for Chalkis. (Plutarch, Mor. 769, after 'Aristotle'; ep. Aristot. Frog. 98 ed. Teub. p. 95.) The geographical position of Chalkis, commanding the Euripos, may have contributed to the issue. The victor respect as reward the great colonial i.e. commercial expansion which sowed Thrace with Chalkidic colonies, and opened Sicily and the west (Camae) to Chalkidic enterprise. Cp. Busolt, Gr. Geach. i. 2 456, E. Meyer, Greek, d. Alterthums, ii. § 302, Freeman, Sicily, i. e. iv., A. Holm, Hist. of Greeke, i. 271 f. (E. T. 1891).

The route from Ephesos to States went up the Kaystros, struck north across Tmolos, and went down the valley of the Paktolos. But this was the regular road from Ephesos to Sudes (c. 54 supera) through the Pass of Kara Bel, and 'guides' can hardly have been necessary. Hdt. himself had not been over the ground, and does not know the roads from Sardes to the coast at first hand. (Cp. W. M. Ramsay, Hist. Geog. of Asia ma. pp. 30, 60 ff., and Appendix

5. οίδενδς άντιωθέντος. That Samles should have been taken upon this occasion without a blow must appear very extraordinary to any one who reflects that according to Hdt.'s own showing the Persian satrap had menths of warning of the rebellion, had witnessed the expulsion of the medising tyunnts (c. 37), the flight of the Paionians from Phrygia (c. 98), was no doubt acquainted with the movements of Aristagorus, and had special reason to keep an eye upon him (c. 35). The De Malignitute 24 preserves a tradition that the Persian forces were besigging Miletos, and that the object of the attack on Sardes was to force them to raise the siege. The Ionians had begun the campaign by defeating the Persian fleet off Pamphylia. This story is rational and coherent, and cannot be dismissed with the remark of Rawlinson that "the silence of Hdt. is conclusive against these statements, as if Ildt. were writing of events with which he was contemporary, or as if his stories furnished a complete and critical record. If a portion of the Persian forces were before Miletos we can understand Artaphrenes retiring on the citaclel. We can understand why the Ionians went to Koresso in boats $(\pi\lambda\phi s_2)$. We can understand the burning and evacuation of Sardes, and one or two other points in the next chapter otherwise obscure.

7. δύναμεν ούκ όλίγην. Another vague phrase, which if true would make the conduct of Artaphrenes the more inexplicable.

101. 2. τόδε. The lonians were prevented sacking Surds by the conflugation of the lower city, which 'compelled' (ἡραγκάγουτο infra) the Persian garrison in the Akropolis, and the Lydians in the lower city, who were surrounded and could not escape into the country, to rally in the Agora, to turn upon the Ionian forces, and drive them away! It is pretty obvious that the facts have been 'doctored.'

5. as telepoor. Helt does not expressly say that the act was accidental. For all that appears, the soldier might have acted under orders, or might have acted of malice propense.

6. ἄστως.. πόλι. The distinction between the άστε and the πόλιs is clearly marked: only the former was consumed. Yet just above πόλιs is used in contrast to ἀκρόπολις. There was nothing to bring the garrison down out of the Akropolis. If the tire seized first the outer ring of the city, and if the Lydians were heumed in, that looks all the less like accident.

14. τοὺς μὸν... τοὺς δέ. This passage looks like a distorted reminiscence of the probable course of events. The Persians are basieging Miletos: the Lonian fleet with the assistance of the Athenian defeat the Persian fleet off the Pamphylian coast. To raise if possible the siege of Miletos Artstagoras projects a brilliant dash on Sardes. It is successfully carried out. The Persian garrison, indeed, holds the citadel, but the town falls into the hands of the Ioniaus, and is fired. Meanwhile Persian forces from before Miletos advance to the reseaue (σὰν πλήθει πολλώ), and the Ioniaus are threatened in front and rear, but make good their retreat under cover of night, not perhaps altog ther empty-handed. They are, however, overtaken and routed "in Epherses" (c. 102).

έπιχωρίης θεοῦ Κυβήβης· τὸ σκηπτόμενοι οἱ Πέρσαι ὕστερον ἀντενεπίμπρασαν τὰ ἐν "Ελλησι ἰρά. τότε δὲ οἱ Πέρσαι οἱ ἐντὸς "Αλυος ποταμοῦ νομοὺς ἔχοντες, προπυνθανόμενοι ταῦτα, 5 συνηλίζοντο καὶ ἐβοήθεον τοῖσι Λυδοῖσι. καί κως ἐν μὲν Σάρδισι οὐκέτι ἐόντας τοὺς Ἰωνας εὐρίσκουσι, ἐπόμενοι δὲ κατὰ στίβον αἰρέουσι αὐτοὺς ἐν Ἐφέσω. καὶ ἀντετάχθησαν μὲν οἱ Ἰωνες, συμβαλόντες δὲ πολλὸν ἐσσώθησαν. καὶ πολλοὺς αὐτῶν οἱ Πέρσαι φονεύουσι ἄλλους τε ὀνομαστούς, ἐν δὲ δὴ καὶ Εὐαλκίδην στρατηγέοντα Ἐρετριέων, στεφανηφόρους τε ἀγῶνας ἀναραιρηκότα καὶ ὑπὸ Σιμωνίδεω τοῦ Κηίου πολλὰ αἰνεθέντα· οἱ δὲ αὐτῶν ἀπέφυγον τὴν μάχην, ἐσκεδάσθησαν ἀνὰ τὰς πόλιας.

102. 2. Κυβήβης, identified with μητήρ Διαδομήμη 1. 80, here treated by Hdt. (and by the Greeks who burnt her temple) as a non-Hellenic divinity. The head-quarters of the great Asiatic mother were rather in Phrygia, at Pessinus, than in Lydia, at Sardes. The identification of Kybele, or Kybele, with Rhea may be later than Hdt. or unknown to him. The classical tract upon the ritual is Lucien's περί τής Συρίης θεοῦ, nor is it likely that the ritual was any purer or more wholesome in earlier times, though the destruction of Kybele's shrine at Sardes is scarcely to be ascribed to Greek puritanism. The Atys-myth, which was involved with the cuit of the Great Mother, is virtually localised or connected with Sardes in the story told 1. 34-45.

τό. The Persians hardly required an excuse for destroying Hellenic shrines, nor did they destroy them apparently of set purpose, or wholesale. The sanctity of Delos they respected, 6, 97 infra, and Delphi was not plundered, much less consumed. But the destruction of the temple at Sardes was, probably, an offence to Greek consciences, and Greek ideas of right were appeared by the colourable quid pro que.

4. lντòs "Aλυos, i.e. west of the Halys, ep. 1. 6.

The vonot would be the first three enumerated 3, 90. But the 'Persians' here referred to were strategi not sutraps, cp. c. 116 infra.

προπυνθανόμενοι grates upon the narrative, and implies that it has been incomplete. The Persians had not been sitting idle all the winter and spring. This indication goes to support the suggestions made above, cc. 100 f. notes.

8. πολλὸν ἐσσάθησαν. If the Ionians (Athenians) and Eretrians suffered 'a great defeat' on the return march from Sardes, it is a wonder that Charen of Lampsakos did not say so. His account ran: 'Αθηναίο δὲ εἰκοστ τρούρσον ἐπλευσαν ἐπικουρήσοντες τοῦς Ἰωσι καὶ εἰς Σάρδεις ἐστρατείσαντο, καὶ εἰνον τὰ περὶ Σάρδεις ἐπαντα χωρίς τοῦ τείχους τοῦ βασινηίου ταῦτα δὲ πουήσαντε ἐπαναχωροδου εἰς Μίλητον, Iv Malig. 24; Müller, F.H.G. i. p. 33, Frag. 2. The burning of Sardes gave an impulse to the revolt (see next chapter) which could hardly have been the case if it had been immediately followed by a crushing defeat. Rawlinson, who suggests that the sea-fight off the Pamphylian coast, omitted by Hdt., "is probably a mere misrepresentation of the battle c. 112 infra," does not suggest that the great defeat at Ephesos here recorded may be an anticipation of the battle c. 116 infra. The death of Evalkides, which looks like hard fact, tends to fix the battle "in Ephesos" to the first campaign: but as Busolt (Gr. G. ii. 33) points out, the Eretrians probably did not desert the Ionian cause with the Athenians.

10. στεφανηφόρους here = στεφαείται. Cp. 8. 26, Hermann, Lehrbuch ii. 2 § 30. 4. His crowns and poetical lauds did not save him nor celebrate him on this occasion: the verses in question were Epinikia not Epitaphia. On Simonides of Keos (n.c. 566-469) see Mahaffy, Gr. Lit. 2 Poets § 148, Bergk, Poet. Lyc. Gr. iii. 4 pp. 382-595 (where this passage appears as No. 9), Flach, Gr. Lyrik, pp. 611-646. Hdt. elsewhere, 7. 228, quotes Simonides, and gives his patronymic

103. 1. το παράπαν απολιπόντες τους wvas. Grote (Pt. 11. e. xxxv. vol. iii. p. 501) gratuitously conjectures "some glaring desertion on the part of their Asiatic allies" to account for this apparently feeble and inconsequent act on the part of the Athenians. only glaring desertion recorded is this very act of the Athenians themselves. Of course there was a sufficient reason, positive or negative, though Hdt. has recorded none. It may be conjectured that the question for the Athenians was not one of staying in Ionia or going home, but of staying at home, or returning, next year, to Ionia. The Athenians hardly sent out their ships with a permanent or unlimited commission. The ships would return to Athens at the end of the season. Somemission. thing had been accomplished: the Persian fleet defeated, the siege of Miletos raised, Sardes destroyed; the revolt in Asia was in full swing; the Athenians might feel themselves safe for the present from the machinations of Hippius and Artaphrenes, and turned a deaf ear to the solicitations of Aristagoras, during the winter and ensuing spring (ἐπικαλεομένου σφέας πολλά δι' ἀγγέλων). Perhaps the promises of Aristagoras, including the 50 talents or so (cp. c. 97 supra), had not been fulfilled. This change of policy was perhaps shortsighted, and sellish; but the twenty ships had not been commissioned in the first instance from motives of heroic altruism or ambition. It should be considered further that It should be considered further that there may have been very good excuses in the foreign relations of Athens west of the Aegean, and in the state of parties in the city itself, for keeping the twenty vessels and their crews at home. Twenty ships could not be engaged permanently on distant service, with Aigins on one side and Chalkis on the other, each looking out for Athenian troubles: and there was probably now, as later, a party in the city itself prepared to suck advantage from any tiaseo abroad, or straining of the state's resources. It is not to be supposed that Aristagoras, who went into the business a bankrupt c. 35 supra, defrayed the expenses. The ships had accomplished their mission. That the Athenians would have been well advised to have supported the revolt again at a later stage is not to be denied. They themselves, when too late, seem to have taken this view of the matter. See 6. 21 infra. There was current a similar criticism upon the policy of the Spartans, cp. c. 50 supra, Thuc. 1. 69, 9. See further, Appendices VII. VIII.

6. materials and there was defined and the strains word may mark.

6. πλώσαντες. This word may mark the beginning of the second year of the war, and it would be difficult to rationalise the Ionian movement except upon the supposition that there was no immediate danger of an advance of the king's fleet, owing to the great victory in the previous summer, off the Pamphylian coast. Cp. c. 102 supra, and Appendix V.

It might be suspected that the towns on the Hellespont proper had joined the revolt earlier, but that Byzantion, Chalkedon, and the towns about them, only joined on the appearance of the Ionian fleet in the second year of the war; ep. c. 117 indra.

Ionian fleet in the second year of the war; ep. c. 117 infra.

A regular and necessary preliminary to the liberation of the Hellespont was an Hellenic victory in the Southern Levant; otherwise Ionia was at the mercy of the king's ships. So the prize of Mykale is the Hellespont 9, 101 ad fin. So Pausanias heads for Kypres before blockading Byzantion in 478-7 n.c., Thuc. 1. 94, and the same strategy is pursued by Kimon and the Athenians, again and again. Kypres was now, indeed, in revolt, but that revolt itself is best explained by the supposition of the naval victory omitted by Hdt. See next chapter. Bυζάντιον. The area of revolt ex-tends now from Kypros all round the coast to Byzantion, for Kypros had probably been wen by the victory off Pamphylia a year before. The burning of Sardes added Karia to the cause: the siege of Miletos was apparently raised: and the first campaign of the new year effects the liberation of the Hellespont and Bosperos.

8. εξω, with accus. 7. 58. The harsh construction is here softened by εκπλώ-

9. Καῦνον. The Kaunians were hardly Hellenes; see 1, 172.

11. τότε. Hdt.'s chronology and causality here are anything but clear, for if Kaunos joined (1) after the rest of Kania, (2) in consequence of the burning of Sardes, then Karia would seem to have joined from the first. But (1) Karia joins after the 'Hellespont' and Byzantien, (2) the news reaches Daurises in his campaign on the Hellespont, c. 117

104. 2. aniornoav. The Kypriotes had presumably declared their independence after the first naval battle (cp. c. 100 supra): otherwise, a disaster at Ephesos, and the Athenian desertion, were hardly good reasons for joining now. There were in Kypros nine city-states, under royal government. Diedor. 10. 42, 4 though describing the condition about 351 B.C. may be taken to illustrate the time of the Ionian revolt. B. Head, Hist. Num. p. 620, enumerates the kingdoms: Salamis, Citium, Marium. Amathus, Curium, Paphos, Soli, Lape-thos, Ceryneia. Of these only Salamis, thos, Ceryneia. Of these only Salamis, Kurion, Soli on the one hand, and Amathus on the other, appear in Hdt.'s narrative. Evelthen, who was known at Delphi, was king of Kyprian Salamis whenas Pheretime fied from Kyrene the first time. See 4, 162 supra. His great-grandson, Onesilos, is now king: the succession seems rapid. It is not, however, actually said that all fear generations sat on the throne. Siromis or Chersis may have dropped out. or Chersis may have dropped out. Amathus (Hamath) was perhaps the head-quarters of the Phoenician interest, as Salamis of the Hellenic.

και ούτοι, se. of Κύπριοι. 6. ώς . . ἐπύθετο. The news would have reached Kypros surely before the voyage to Byzantion: perhaps, indeed, before the return of Aristagoras to Ionia. The information was probably sent, and the co-operation of the Kyprretes invited, c. 38 supra. Was the force enclosed with a wall, or were the mean mentioned those of the moles?

105. 2. ώς κτλ. The fact would have been known in Susa before the end of the first year, for it would not take the king's messengers long to bear the news:

cp. 8. 95 (the Royal Post).
3. 'Αθηναίων. This is the first clear indication in Hdt.'s text that the Athenians marched to Sirdes, cp. c. 100 supra. The Eretrius have dropped out: in c. 102 supra their presence on the march to and from Saides seems guaranteed.

συλλογής . . συνυφανθήναι. The expression is somewhat obscure, σελογή would seem to refer to the combination, conscription, co-operation (costio, Schweig.) of Athenians and Ionians: σενυφανθήναι should primarily to devising, weaving, plans: raira would prima facis apply to the apture and conflagration of Sardes. There is, in short, in the passage a confusion of (a) the terminology proper to describe the external course of events and of (b) the terminology proper to describe the internal designs or causality: (α) Ι σιλλογή 'Αθηναίων και 'Ιώνων, 2 Σάρδις άλουσας έμπ, υπό 'Αθ, καί 'Ι., 3 τον ηγιμόνα γινέπθαι της σιλλ. 'Ιώνων οὐδένα λόγον ποιησάμενον.

This is the traditional attitude of the Persian King towards Ionians. So Kyros 1. 159, so kambyses 2. 1 (Nerves otherwise, 8, 90). Hdt. is no admirer of the lonians, see 4, 142. Whether he or his (Athenian) source is responsible for the remark is not clear. Cp. Intro-

But not a word of this in Hdt. or his (Athenian) source.

7. dpiorta. Like Attaphrenes pre-viously, c. 73 supra. (There was more excuse for Kyros in 546 s.c. asking the original question about the Spartans, 1. 153.) Dareios (i.e. Hdt.) has for-gotten the wishes of Atossa 3. 134, and the mission of Demokedes and the spies, 3. 136 ff. Hdt. takes the story as he finds it. The formula is a standing one:

finds it. The formula is a standing one: cp. e. 13 supra, 8. τὸ τόξον. A graphic and appropriate touch. The ancedote has an oriental colour. There were poets and story-tellers in Athens quite equal to this (e.g. Aischyl, Fersne). Cp. e. 18 supra, 6. 21 infra.

28. Σαρδώ. Histiaios presumes too far upon the king's geographical ignorance, in vowing the conquest of Sardinia before Naxos, the Kyklades, Euboca and Athens. The passage no doubt was intended to be Sardonically comic (Σαρδώ), but the satire is crude. After the real subtlety and dramatic propriety of the speech of Histiaios the mere word-play is an artistic blot.

Σαρδώ νήσον τὴν μεγίστην. The conquest, or the colonisation of Sardinia, is an old idea with the Ionians (cp. 1. 170, c. 124 infra, 6. 2). As to its size: Freeman (Sicily, i. pp. 2, 241) accepts the Herodotean view, which is certainly erroneous. Kiepert has: "wrongly supposed by the ancients to be the largest island in the Mediterraneau," Manual of Geography, § 243. Stanford's Compendium, Europe (1885) p. 207, makes Sicily "the largest island in the Mediterraneau." In the excellent Epitome of Geography for the use of National Schools of Ireland (Dublin, Mackay's Elements of Geography, 1867, p. 119, gives the area of Sixily, "the largest island in the Mediterranean," as 10,556 sq. miles, and the area of Sardinia "the second largest island in the Mediterranean" as and the area of Sardinia "the Second largest island in the Mediterranean" as 9167 sq. miles.  & τούτω παντί τω χρόνω. This chronological indication is more precise than acceptable. Nor is it really precise. The news about Sardes must surely have teached the king before the opening of the second year of the war (cp. c. 105 supra); the episode of the bow, the interview with Histiaios, were affairs of minutes merely: the journey of Histiaios down to 'the sea' (Ionia, or Phoenicia) was a longer business. At best, this passage cannot be taken to prove more than that before Histories reached Sardes (6, 1) the war in Kypros had been concluded (c. 116 infra). It might further be argued that the siege of Amathus was in progress during the winter (498-7 n.c.). But if the king's fleet had been heavily defeated in 498

S. Ιωνες ούκ & μ. β. This is the first hint in the actual narrative of the Ionian revolt of the confederate council and authority. The brevity of the and authority. The brevity of the deliberation on this occasion cannot be adduced as a proof of the folly or cowardice of the Ionians. They seem to have understood the advantage of supporting the revolt in Kypros as well as the Atheniaus understood the advantage of supporting the revolt in Ionia. The brevity of the deliberation indicates, however, that the confederate council. and authority. however, that the confederate council was in full working order, and had probably been directing affairs hitherto, although Hdt. has saud nothing about it; and also that the revolt of Kypros had been part of the general and concerted programme. Cp. c. 104 supra.

11. τῆσι δὶ νηνσί. Did the Phoenician vessels ship the Persian troops across from Kilikia (perhaps the Aleian plain, ep. 6. 95 infra) to Kypros, and then proceed round 'the Keys,' or were not two separate flocts employed, transports and men-of-war? 12.  109. 1. of τύραννοι . . τους στρατηγούς (c. 38). The 'tyrants' of Kypnes here appear as the champions of freedom, at least from the foreign yoke, and as allies of the republican Ionians. The hostility and competition of Hellene and Phoenician in Kypros sufficiently explain the anomaly. A parallel case is supplied by Sicily, where the Hellenic terror is the description of Mellenic tyrant is the champion of Hellenism against the Carthaginian. Cp. 7, 165

3. aspectiv. This amphibious idea, that the same soldiers could fight equally well on sea and on land, would imply a comparatively radimentary condition of the arts of war at the time, if the recorded offer was ever made. The offer no doubt is confined to the fighting-men: the carsmen presumably were to stay where they were. Yet perhaps the anecdote is searcely historical. The patrenting airs of superiority assumed by lonruntowards Kypriotes would atmose an supra. Says Grote, Pt. 11. c. xxxv. (vol. iii. p. 502), "we hear now, for the first and the last time, of a tolerably efficient Pan-Ionic authority." But 1, 141 shows the Pan-Ionic council at week shows the ran-tonic council at werk fifty years before, though Miletos then was excommunicate. The expression here may signify that Aristagoras the 'tyrant' had not sent the fleet, either decause he had not authority, or because he was already off to Thrace. Cp c. 123 infra. The historian's record here is anyway not devoid of a certain humour. The Ionians look down on 'Kyprians' much as Athenians upon Ionians, c. 69 suppa. To avoid facing the Persian infantry (cp. 6, 112) on the plea of a strict adherence to discipline (cp. 6, 12) and to remind the men of Kypros of their servicule to the 'Mede' and exhort them to courage (cp. 4, 142), are malicious touches in Ionian pertraiture, as painted by Hdt. Not but what άλλ' οὐκ ίνα Κυπριοισι τὰς νέας παραδόντες αὐτοὶ πεζή Πέρσησι προσφερώμεθα. ήμεις μέν νυν έπ' οὐ έτάχθημεν, ταύτη πειρησόμεθα είναι χρηστοί· ύμέας δὲ χρεόν ἐστι ἀναμνησθέντας οία έπασχετε δουλεύοντες προς των Μήδων, γίνεσθαι άνδρας άγαθούς." 15

Salamis from its name and position no doubt was originally Phoenician, the notion was originally Phoenician, the netion of a colony from Attic Salamis being pragmatic (cp. Busolt, Gr. G. i.² p. 321): nor is it likely that Seli was named from Solon (according to the etymologising anecdote in Plutarch, Solon, 26); there was another Soli on the coast of Kilikia, and Hdt. apparently takes Solon to Soli in Kypros, c. 113 infra. The Greek spoken at Soli was proverbially incorrect, even in the time of Hdt., cp. 4. 117. But the town was undoubtedly Hellenic, though whether founded from Athens or not can hardly founded from Athens or not can hardly be regarded as fully ascertained. The temple of Athene might be an evidence, or merely an explanation of the legend. Busolt, Gr. G. i. 2021, inclines to regard the Athenian settlement as historic. 111. 1, ήλανες, 'rode.' Hellas Hdt. holds a very high place.

^{8.} ὁπάων. The form ὁπάων is certainly poetical, and to change it here into lπέων (with Forstemann, de vocabulis quae videntur apud Herodotum poeticis, 1892) would lower the tone of the anecdote.

^{11.} προσφερέστερον is Stein's emendation for προφερέστερον. προσφέρης means 'like. Why not προσφορώτερον, the προσφερέστερου having been introduced by προσφέρεσθαι just below! Stein, however, thinks that Hdt. wrote προσψορέστερον. Cp. his note ad l. (1882).

Hdt. could hardly have written the story of the Kyprian campaign of 497 n.c. with-out a thought of the later campaigns, in which the Athenians were engaged: and there may be a dim reference to those later days in the words ergori per run Twees daspot geromeno tactur the interpret might however only point the contrast with Lade. 113. 3. Στησήνωρ. Stesenor, the traiter, is a 'tyrant': Onesides and Aristokypros, 'kings.' But the point cannot be pressed, cp. c. 109 supra. The name Stasioccus appears at Curium, about 420 n.e. (Head, Hist. Nam. p.

15 the name connected with the Κούρητες and the cult of Zeus?
5. λέγονται. Hdt. doubts the statement (cp. 4. 184). The connexion, real or supposed, between 'Argos' and Kypros is suggestive, whichever of the two was the terminus a quo; the remark of Mr. Head's (Hist. Num. p. 200) that the weight standard of all the 620) that the weight standard of all the Kypriote silver money is at first the Alginetic somewhat reduced, may point to later commercial relations, but might lead to a date too recent for the original settlements. But (1) archaeological evidence, especially 'Mykenaean' pottery, (2) the resemblance of the Kypriote and Arkadian dialects, and perhaps (3) the separate Kypriote syllabary (cp. Decke, in Baumeister's Denkmaler, p. 51, Hinrichs, in I. Müller, Handbuch, i. 365), go to show that l'eloponnesian settlers were in Kypros before the close of the

Mykenaean period. Cp. further, Busolt, Gr. G. i. 318 ff. 12. Σόλων δ 'Αθηναίος, cp. c. 110 supra. The visit of Solon to Kypros cannot have been later than 560-550 n.e. and might have been 20-30 years earlier. Upwards of sixty, it may be upwards of ninety, years thereafter the sen of Philokypros, Solon's contemporary and friend, is killed in battle. The succession in this case appears as much too slow as in the former case of Onesilos

(c. 104) too rapid.

1v Incor. Plutarch, Salon 26, says èv rais Aeyelau, and quotes them (cp. Bergk, Poet. Lyr. ii. p. 47), from which it does not follow that Hdt. knew not an Epos from an Elegy, when he saw them, but only that the terms are αίνεσε τυράννων μάλιστα. It is not quite clear whether, in the eyes of Hdt., the act was a credit to Philokypros or the act was a credit to Philosypros or a discredit to Solon. Anyway Solon may have seen that what suited Athens might not suit Soli, and have praised Philosypros though he blamed Peisistrates. The visits of Solon to Kypros, Egypt (ep. 2, 177) and Lydia (1, 29) may have had a politice-commercial object, at least in part.

114. 2. ἐπολιόρκησε, ec. 104, 105 supra. The victory of the Persians on land, and the retreat of the Ionian fleet, presumably relieved Amathus: even if the siege had not been already raised (cp. c. 110 supra).

9. πέμπτω μηνί, 'after four months.' Probably late in the automn of 496 μ.c. or in the winter following. If strict calendar months underlie this date, the time might be reduced to something just over three natural months.

116. 1. ἐνιαυτόν, 497-6 κ.c. more or less, the revolt of Kypros being dated to the close of the first campaign (cp. cc. 103, 104 supra), and the summons and advent of the Ionians (c. 108 supra) falling apparently after the operations in the Hellespont and the accession of Karia (cc. 103, 117), in the summer of the second campaign. But cp. 6. 6 in fro. Whether this 'year' includes the 'four months' just indicated is not quite clear: probably not.

2. κατεδεδούλωντο. The tense ought to signify that the reduction of Kypros was completed before what is next described took place: but that is rather difficult to believe. The pursuit of the Ionians who had marched to Sardes surely must have taken place long before the reduction of Kypros, possibly indeed before even the revolt of Kypros (c. 101 supra). The tense is graphic.

closely connected together in their command. The patronymics unfortunately are not given. Hymaias is not commemorated elsewhere, except c. 122 infra. Otanes is the son of Sisalanes, c. 25 ευργα στρατηγός των παραθαλασσίων τη μάχη seems naturally to refer to the Persian victory related c. 102 supra and placed by Hdt. immediately after the burning of Sardes, on the way back. After the battle, as appears from this passage, the Ionians are driven into their ships, and the victorious Persians proceed to capture and devastate the cities. In the previous narrative, however, the battle is followed by the revolt of Karia and Kaunos from the Persians-a curious consequence of a Persians—a carious consequence of a crushing defeat of the revolters!—and by the liberation of the Hellespont and Kypros (for a year). The narrative of Helt. is evidently incomplete, and probably inscentate. If a defeat was inflicted upon the Ionians, Athenian and Eretrians on the way back from Sardes (c. 102), it cannot have been a crushing one. If the Ionians were heavily defeated in a great battle by the three generals here named for the first time it was in a subsequent campaign. time it was in a subsequent campaign, either next year, when the Ioniau fleet was off Kypros, or more probably two years later, after the return of the fleet, and the reduction of Kypros, as is here perhaps indicated. The revolt of Karia (c. 103 supra) is mentioned again in the next chapter (117), in connexion with the operations of Daurises against the Hellespontine towns.

117. 1. τάς έν Έλλησπόντω πόλις. The Hellespontine cities had joined the Ionians, under pressure, apparently after the departure of the Athenians, c. 103 supra. The operations of Daurises supra. The operations of Daurises described in this chapter might fall into 497 R.C. Hdt. seems to conceive them as preceding the revolt of the Karians, cp. c. 103 supra. Byzantion and all the other cities are mentioned there; including, presumably, those specified c. 26 supra. But the cities enumerated here lie to the S.W. on the Asian side of the Hellespont, properly so called (cp. 4.85), Hellespont, properly so called (cp. 4, 85), and are enumerated in strictly geographical order from S.W. to N.E. (cp. 7, 48). They may have joined the Ionians from the first, or at any rate months before the revolt of Byzantion. By the chronological indications here given the recapture of these Hellespontine cities should fall after their revolt and before the revolt of Karfa (cp. e. 102 carra) or the revolt of Karia (ep. c. 103 supra), or at least before the news of the revolt of the Karians reached Daurises at Paises.

This would presumably be the season after the burning of Sardes (ep. c. 103).

118. 1. ξαγγλθη. The Karians, like the Kyprians, c. 108 supra, are well informed of the movements of the Persians. Hdt.'s silence in respect to the Dorian cities in Karia is remarkable.

3. Leukae Stelae has not been identified. Strabo, 608, mentions a quarry of specially good marble above Mylassa. The Idrian country is the country about Stratonicaea. See Rawlinson ad l. 6. Pixodaros son of Mausolos; from his connexion with Syennesis (cp. 1. 74, 7. 98) and from the recurrence of the names, Mausolos as a Karian Dynast, and in Halikarnassos, 377-363 e.e., a century after the time of Hdt. (cp. Diodor. 15. 90, 3), Pixodaros 341-395 n.c. (B. Head, Hist. Num. p. 593), as well as from the way Hdt. here speaks of Pixodaros, it may be conjectured that he was connected with Artemisia of Halikarnassos (7. 99, 8. passim), and though described as a man of Kindys, an insignificant place, had a dynastic position. Busolt, Gr. G. ii. 33, remarks that Karian dynasts (from their hereditary position) were more independent of the Persian power than Greek tyrants.

In the first of these 10,000 (sic) Karians are slain: the second is a still more crushing defeat: the second is a still more crushing defeat: the third is a brilliant victory. The intervals which clapsed between these three engagements are not indicated: days, or months, or years? Cp. Appendix V. 6. Storxiklovs. . puploys. Hdt. unfortunately does not locate this battle, in which the most crushing defeat was inflicted upon the rebels: yet the terms of the norrative, if pressed, would serve to locate it in Libranda (βουλευομένοισι . παραγίνονται. 3. ετάχθησαν. The phrase would hardly be correct if Artaphrenes were the guiding spirit and highest authority in these strategic plans. The campaign against Ionia was presumably carried out synchronously with the campaigns for the recovery of the Hellespont. Aiolis and Karia: and the operations of Daurises in the Hellespont, and afterwards in Karia, of Hymaias on the Propontis and afterwards on the Heilerpont, and of Otanes in Ionia are to be thought of as approximately syn-chronous. Why Durises, rather than Otanes, moved down into Karia is not very evident. The whole plan of opera-tions may have been concerted in Susa by the king and his counsellers, including the renegade Hellenes, not without reference to the operations against Kypros, the basis of which was Kilikia. See further on the Ionian navy list at Inde, 6. Sinfra.

9. tre(χες, imperfect. Op. c. 23 supra. Histiaias had not completed his work. The text in this passage (λέγων. λαβών) seems hardly satisfactory. The words rip 'Iστεαίος δτείχες παρά Δασίου λασέου λασέ pelou δωρεήν λαβών look like a gloss, the rather as creixee is hardly accurate, and the remark in any case could not have occurred in the speech of Aristagoras. The words ex τοῦ τόπου τούτου ore clumsy. Even the report of Aristagoras' argument is open to doubt (λέγων . Μιλήτου), for a κρησφέγετου he certainly had, in Myrkinos, and the point which emerges is whether he should lead his colony to Myrkinos or to Sardinia. Finally, there is in the text as it stands, an apparent aposiopesis (which would be obviated by bracketing λέγων . . Μιλήτου). But perhaps the objections are to be obviated by the supposition that Hdt. is here compressing a story which Hekataios had recorded more fully.

125. 1. Έκαταίου. Hekataios' suggestions, as reported by Hdt., are never gestions, as reported by Phile, are increased on (cp. c. 36 supra); nor his views expressly approved (cp. 2, 143, 6, 137). If Hekataios really merely proposed ήσυχίην Δγειν έν Λέρφ, to shelter in Leros, a small island off Miletos, till the war was over, his proposal was indeed absurd. The advice of Hekataios seems to have a better application to a political στάσα in Miletos, than to the given situation in a war with the Persians by sea and land; and it is possible that Hdt, has confused two occasions. Hekataios may have recommended the occupation of Leros: Hekataios may have opposed the flight of Aristagoras: but the assertion that Hekataios advocated the occupation of Leios as an alternative to the settlement in Sardinia, or in Thrace, may be a combination on Hdt.'s own part. intended to make Hekataios ridiculous (cp. 4, 36).

 The co-ordination is imperfect.

Thucydides 4. 102 apparently referring to this event informs us that Aristagoras endeavoured to effect a settlement upon the site where Amphipolis afterwards stood, then called Nine Ways (cp. 7. 114 infra), dλλ' ὑπὸ 'Ηδώνων ἐξεκρούσθη. Thucydides supplies chronological data which seem to fix the event to the year 497 B.O. (cp. Clinton, Fast. Hell. ii.'s pp. 317 ff.). This, according to our reconstruction of the chronology of the Ionian revolt (cp. Appendix V.), would place the failure, and death, of Aristagoras in Thrace, before the opening of the third campaign against the Ionians. How soon after his arrival in Thrace Aristagoras was disturbed by the Edonians is not stated, but the interval need not be supposed a long one. If Aristagoras left Miletos any time during the year 497 B.C., it might be in consequence of the successful operations against the cities co. 116-117, or even after the great defeats on the Marsyas and at Labraunda (118-119). It might even be argued that he fied before the fleet went to Kypros (cp. c. 109 supra). He was gone presumably before the arrival of Histiaios at Sardes 6. 1. It is remarkable that Hdt does not here name the \(\tau\)oks attacked by Aristagoras, much less the subsequent attempts by the Athenians circa 465 B.C. and 436 B.C. to colonise it (cp. 9. 75, 6. 92 infra). Nor does he localise the city, nor name the Thracian tribe. This pessage was presumably written after the first and probably after the second attempt, but it is possible that Hdt. did not identify the spot (cp. 7. 114). Hence too, perhaps, the precision of Thucydides.

1. 1. 'Αρισταγόρης μέν. This sentence might be the last of the fifth or the first of the sixth Book: cp. the passages from the seventh to the eighth, and from the eighth to the ninth. The division between the fifth and sixth Books is purely arbitrary: the narrative is absolutely continuous. However, it is characteristic of Herodotus to conclude a narrative, or gain a pause, by a biographical or ancedotal passage or appendix (cp. 4, 143 f., 205, 6, 137 ff., 9, 122): and from this point of view the divisions between Books 4 and 5, Books 5 and 6 are well devised. 2. 'Ioriatos δί. It might appear from the sequence of the sentences as if the death of Aristagoras preceded the return of Histiaios, but the tenses may partially correct that assumption (τελευτά... παράν, but some MSS. read οδτων έτελεύτα): though the material considerations point to the conclusion that Aristagoras had evacuated Miletos before the reappearance of Histiaios: for (1) this conclusion suits the probable chronology, ep. 5. 124 and Appendix V.; (2) if Aristagoras had still been in Miletos, Histiaios would have gone to Miletos, rather than to Chios, ep. c. 5 infra. For the disregard of strict chronological sequence by Hdt., ep. the story of the death of Kleomenes c. 74 infra.

where Aristagoras is protagonist, and the message of Histiaios a mere coincidence.

Whether Histiaios was playing a double game or not, or whether he changed his plans opportunely, may fairly be doubted. That he was released from Susa on the strength of his vow to add Sardinia to the empire is not probable (ep. 5. 106). That he came to recover the tyranny of Miletos rather than to head the rebellion against Dareies is at least possible. If Aristagoras (5, 124), if Hekataios (5, 36), if Dareios (5, 105), all counted on the collapse of the rebellion, is it reasonable. to ascribe to Histiaios a less intelligent forecast? Distrusted and hampered by Artaphrenes, shut out of Miletos, sus-pected by the men of Chios, the great adventurer was equal to the occasion. If he knew the strength, he also perhaps knew the weakness of the empire better than most men: he may have been already counting on the king's death, and a palace revolution. The aspect of affairs in Ionia may have encouraged him. He claimed to be the real author of the national movement. He managed to reassure the Chians, or at least made good his escape from Chios, but he failed to secure the legenomia. With his failure the last chance of sufficiently capable and authoritative leadership disappeared, and the separatist tendencies in Ionia grined upon the confederation.

3. 1. ὑπὸ τ. Ί. Perhaps the Federal council surely not merely the Chians,

3. κακόν τοσούτον. The report of this inquiry is barely credible. Even Ionians would scarcely have described the struggle for freedom in such terms. The letter and spirit of the question are incompatible with the action of the Ionians throughout the struggle. They are rid of domestic tyrants, they are fighting gallantly, and so far not unsuccessfully for their freedom from the foreign yoke, and they represent the man whom they acknowledge as the author of the movement, and who, as hypothesi, is now prepared to head it, with injuring them! The obvious answer of Histiaios would have been: Nor I nor Aristagoras could have made you revolt from the king against your own will and judgment. The ancestore is evidently coloured by afterthought and knowledge of the event. Hdt. fully endorsed the shallow view that the Ionian revolt was a huge mistake, 5, 97, 98, 124.

Chian oligarchs ready to hand over Miletos to a tyrant, Acclians of Lesbos ready to blacking il lonians at the Bospores. Such things may not be incredible, but it is also possible that the facts are misdated, or misrepresented, in these somewhat incoherent traditions. The Chians and Lesbians are in force at Lade, c. 8 infra. The Chians and Mile-sians were old friends, 1, 18, and both must have been represented at the next meeting at the Panienion c. 7 infra, yet no complaint is heard there, or at bast, none is recorded.

3. of στρατηγοί τ. II. Of the three generals who had been originally entrusted with the task of quelling the revolt (5. 116) only Otanes was left. Perhaps Harpagos (c. 28 infra) and Artaphrenes the younger, or his father (5. 123), are now in the field. The disappearance of the names of the Persian appearance of the names of the Persian generals and admirals at this point is noticeable.

6. προθυμότατοι. The Phoenicians had not merely two defeats to avenge (5. 99, 112), but the prospect of recovering their quondam position in the Aegaean, c. 3 supra.

7. Kúmpioi. It is possible that even Greek vessels fought on the Persian side at Lade, e.g. the men of Kurion, 5. 113. Cp. 7. 70. Phoenicians, Egyptians, Kyprians, Kilikians furnish the bulk of the navy of Xerxes afterwards, 7. 89 ff. The mobilisation of such a fleet is testimony to the magnitude and importance of the Ionian revolt.

vewort k., 5. 116. In the year 496 B.C. probably. The date now reached is presumably just before the campaign of 494 B.C. which culminated at Lade. The great meeting at the Panionion may be dated in the winter 495-4 B.C. The earliest possible date for the reduction of the Kurrians would be the reduction of the Kyprians would be in the winter of 497-6 R.C. The rework here might almost persuade us to bring down the year of Kypriote freedom (5. 416) into the year 496-5 B.C. Appendix V.

The old religious focus was used for political and military purposes. This meeting of the Ionian representatives to devise a plan of operation was clearly not the first during the war: see 5.

109. Probably from the beginning (5. 37, 38) το κοινόν τῶν Ἰώνων had been revived to deliberate periodically and direct the movement. This meeting, however, in the winter or spring of 495/4 B.C. was perhaps specially remembered, as the last, and that one at which the desperate resolution was taken, to abandon the struggle by land, and stake all upon another, a third, great naval engagement.

8. vyoos. Lade was still an island in the time of Strubo, 635. The alluvial

8. 2. δσοι τὴν Λέσβον. This is Stein's text, combined out of δσοι τὴν λέολέα και ΔΕΕΕΙ (- Helder) and a stable of the steel of the stee alohida $\gamma \hat{\eta} \nu$ ABClet (= Holder a) and of Adopor PmR (= Holder β). (The Acolians of the Troad were already reduced 5. 122, of the Tidad were already reduced 5. 122.) But it would have been queer if the Lesbians had just previously sent eight ships to blackmail the Ionians at Byzantion e. 5 supra, and now sent seventy to the support of the Ionians at Lade. The Dorians are conspicuous by their absence: not a Rhodian vessel, not a vessel from Knidos, Halikamassos or any Karian city! Of the members of the Ionian Dodekapolis eight are here present : what of the absentees ? Ephesos seems to have taken little if any part in the revolt. Ephesians had aeted as guides to Sardes 5, 100. Against that service may be set the massacro of the Chians c. 16 infra. Ephesos did not suffer by the revolt: she had had her share in the days of Kyros, when Miletos had got off seot-free, l. 141. Klazomenae was apparently When Miletos had got on sect-free,

5. 123. Lebedos and Kolophon may have shared the fate of Klazemenae, though Hdt. does not say so. In regard to the eight remaining: the exact specification of their contingents, and of the total, is remarkable. One would like to believe that Hdt. had some authentic information upon the subject, and was not merely basing an inference upon the maxima ascer-tained for the period of Athenian supremacy, in his own day. Sames had been swept and devastated less than twenty years before (3, 149), yet is now among the most flourishing. It is the former statement probably that is exaggerated. Chios sends 100 that is exaggerated. Chros sends 100 ships; Miletos, notwithstanding the necessity of defending the town (\tau reixea \(\text{piecova} \) a chross Midnology c. 7), 80 ships; Lesbians (Acolians) 70, but they were not present in full force, if eight ships were at Eyzantion with Mileting (n. 5); the Sanione and 60 Histinios (c. 5); the Samians send 60. In their case there was the Record in the Agora, which Hdt. probably saw c. 14 infra, but it only vouched for 11 ships, and it can hardly have been inscribed and erected before Mykale, 479/8 s.c., when the oligarchy was restored. At the date of Lade, Athens ex hypothesi can only launch 50 triremes and yet holds her own with Aigina (ep. c, 89 in/ra). There is a great drop from Samos with its 60 to Teas with its 17 triremes, Priene with 12, and Erythrae with eight. Myns and Phokaia close the list with three apiece. The total is correctly stated as 353. The 600 given as the number of the 'barbarians' looks suspiciously like a round number. It is exactly the number of the fleet It is exactly the number of the fleet of Datis and Artaphrenes, c. 95 in/ra, and it is not distributed among the nations mentioned as supplying the fleet in c. 6. Even the centingents of Chios, Miletos, Lesbes, Samos, are suspiciously round and large, as compared with the navy lists for Artemision (8. 1) and Salamis (8. 43 ff., 82). The positions of the Hellenic allies are enumerated in a line running east and west. rated in a line running east and west. They have their front to the south, whence the Phoenicians are approaching.

3. ἀγνωμοσύνη. The word is used with a 'dyslegistie' implication; it was a mental quality opposed to σοφία (2. 172) and akin to σκαιότης (7. 9), and rarely, if ever, productive of advantage to its possessor; ep. 4. 93, 9. 3, where it is the antecedent of defeat. Only in the case of the Aiginetan defection from Epidaurus did success attend it 5. 53, if success it could be called, to be successful thieves. Cp. Introduction, p. evi.

4. Tracros &Sórcov. It may fairly be doubted whether this remark comes from any other than a single source; whether these first messages 'to all the states whose tyrants had been deposed by Aristigoras,' dictated in the ipassimit verba of the Persian strategi, are much more than an afterthought, to soften the conduct of the Samians recorded

This popular way of conducting a campaign, by discussion, would be an object lesson and contrast to Athenian methods at the time when Helt, is writing, and its results their justification. But what of the other strategi, of whom no account is made in this story! Cp. points in the story of Salamis, 8. 56, 59, 61, 64, 74, 78, on which this story may have been modelled. Cp. This point, if it could be admitted, would be a gain to the striking parallel which Grote has drawn between Lade and Salamis (Pt. 11. c. xxxv. vol. iii. pp. 510 ff. Cp. c. 12 infra). But the supposed alandonment of Phokaia happened half a century before Lade, and Dionysias and his three ships would have been rather past ships would have been rather past service by this time. The exiles of Phokaia have been already provided for in the west, 1. 103 ff. If Dionysios and his men were exiles, where were the Phokaians of the city! The reproach against him is not that he is homeless but that he commands the smallest contingent. A remnant of Phokaians had returned to the city, I. 165. It

The comstruction of the sentence okus coernos χρήσαιτο κτλ. is remarkable. Kruger approves of Schweighauser's second thought ut remiges ex recret (cp. 5. 98 moieur anavra dkws . . yerolaro, 5. 98 éncies δεως β. Δ. λυπήσειε). But the context and the material sense suggest the view that been upipairo and onlinese is practically co-ordinate with exer-napeixe re, the one sentence describing what took place the first part of the day, the other what took place to Aosmor Tis ήμέρης. Schweighäuser's first thought postpuam remiges exercussed is not happily expressed, but comes neater the sense. Day by day he put out to sea, in column, keeping the oarsmen at work. as he made them perform the Dickylus, and keeping the Marines all the while under arms; and when the manageres were over, making the thips cast anchor and giving the Ionians no rest all day τησι νηυσί δι' άλληλίων could very well be

21. αναπειρασθαι. Cp. διαπειρασθαι 5. 109, απόπειραν . . ποιείσθαι 8. 9.

The Ionians were old sailors; their colonies studded the shores of the Mediterranean, Aegean, Pontos; they had memory of endless adventures, from Nile to Phasis, from Kypros to Tartessos.
They had already in this war proved victorious once, and perhaps again, over the king's vessels. A few days after taking to their tents they engaged the Persians, and owed a defeat largely to treachery. They fought well at Salamis for the king, and at Mykale, on the Hellespont, in Egypt and Kypros afterwards against him. No doubt their discipline was in Hdt.'s days far inferior to that of the Athenians (cp. Thue. 1. 99); that inferiority was vividly present to the minds of the - Athenians, who had left their kinsmen to fight their battle at Lade, and who afterwards justified their own usurpation on the ground of their superiority (cp. Thuc. 1.75). The contrast which Grote (l. c.) elaborates, apropos of Lade, is consciously patent in the Herodotean tradition. The moral is already here, and Grote, in taking the tradition au pied de la lettre, has, so to speak, fallen into the trap which a philo-Athenian writer, or his sources, has laid for us, Insubordination (ἀταξίη) and mollesse (μαλακίη) (c. 11 supra), disease (νόσοι) and treachery (c. 13) may all have been present, and co-operated towards the result; but we should have more respect for the veri-similitude of the tradition in the former particulars, if the Samians, who in the next chapter are distinguished from 'the had not been the traitors. The Herodotean account of the conduct and collapse of the Ionians at Lade is at once a satire on the Ionians, and a justification of the Athenian supremacy, as necessary to keep them together, and to save them from Persia. Afterthought, and apparently even after-events, have been used in the building of the story. More than half a century after Lade the Samian secession shook the Athenion supremacy almost to its foundations. (Cp. Thue. I. 116-117, S. 76, 4, Plutarch, Perikles, c. 28 ad fin.) The story of Lade is certainly in part from Samian sources (cp. c. 14 infin.). Lesbos, Chios, and Miletos were arrayed upon the side of Atheus, in 429 s.c. Byzantion joined Samos in the revolt. Sames in the revolt.

13. 1. ol στρατηγοί τῶν Σαμίων (ep. c. 14 infra) are here distinguished from 'the Ionians,' as though 'the Samians'

were not to be reproached with drasing and mananin. 'The Ionians' in fact are made responsible in the first instance for the treachery of 'the Samiaus.'
The Samiaus like Aristageras 5, 124 take the view that ἀδύνατα τὰ βασιλέοι πρήγματα (= βασιλέα Δαρείον l. c.) επερ-βαλόσθαι. Cp. 5. 36. It is observable that in this process of whitewashing 'the Samians' Helt.'s grammar becomes decidedly involved, giving rise to cor-ruptions of the text. Holder and van Herwerden follow Cobet in transferring έδέκοντο τοις λόγοις so as to precede έπεμπε. Even so, the sentence remains incoherent. Cp. c. 25 infra.

3. οὐκ ἔχω ἀτρεκέως συγγράψαι
Oddly enough, Hdt. had a similar diffi culty about the battle of Salamis, ep. 8. 87. This confession and the reason for the inability (άλλήλους γάρ καταιτιώνται) etc highly significant of the untrustwenthy character of the Greek traditions, which differed widely in regard to the same events, according to the interests or pertialities of the states, factions, and persons involved. It must not be concluded from the formulae here that Hd: had only oral tradition to deal with Grote (iii. 512) argues from "the

9. τὸ κοινὸν τῶν Σαμίων. This grace, and the erection of the stele, must surely date from days subsequent to the battle of Mykale, and the liberation of Samos, ep. 9. 90, 103, 106. The evidences for Lado were post-Salaminian. Hot. presumably had seen this very stele, and it is to be regretted that he did not copy or report the inscription, which probably contained more than here proper names and patronymies. The πρήγρα may or may not have been set forth in the title (ep. 8, 82). The phrases τὸ κοινὸν τῶν Σαμίων and ὡς ἀνδράσι ἀγαθοῖσι γενομένοισι may be from the inscription.

15. 1. τῶν δὶ παραμεινάντων κτλ. This chapter seems to qualify the statement, just above, that the historian cannot record who behaved well in the action. The 100 Chian ships greatly distinguished themselves, and suffered proportionately. Forty-nine Samian and 70 Lesbian ships had quitted the battle. It is remarkable that nothing is said of the conduct of the 80 Milesian ships: presumably they fought, and the same may be assumed of the (three) ships of Phokaia. There remain only the contingents of Teos, Priene, Erythrae, and Myus, making 40 ships together. The ships of Priene were next those of Miletos: those of Teos and Erythrae east and west of the Chians. In short, it is certain that the 130 ships, or rather 119 originally (c. 8 supra) forming the west or right wing towards the high sea, and subsequently perhaps the head of the column (êm kêpar c. 14 supra), sailed away, and this act was sufficient to explain the sequel without supposing that their shameful example was followed by 'a majority of the Ionians.'

The story here omits the Phokaians, to concentrate attention on the Chians, who came behind the shipsof Phokaia and Erythrae, and is perhaps from a Chian source. Some one (Ion?) may even have written of the deeds and sufferings of the Chians (δσα έρξαν η έπαθον άξιόχρεα άπηγησιος) before Hdt. collected his anecdotes.

θεσμοφορίων. The Thesmophoria were an autumn Festival at Athens (A. Mommsen, Heartologie, p. 291), and presumably elsewhere. Accepting the mysterious story in the text as a chronological indication, we are supplied with an approximate season for the battle of Lade. Like Marathon, Salamis. Plataca Mykale, it was a September fight. On the origin of the Thesmophoria cp. 2, 171. It was a 'Pelasgie' function. The Ephesians were remarkable for not Inc applies and were remarkable for hot celebrating the Ionian Apaturia, 1, 147. Hdt. supplies evidence of the celebration of the Thesmophoria in Aigina c. 91 infra, and in Attica, cp. 8, 96. Men were excluded, Aristoph. Thesm. 633. The celebration evidently took place at night, outside the city, and probably under the full moon.

Their ignorance of what was going on at Lade and Miletos is curious, not to say incredible: but it may have served as an excuse afterwards, when this exploit was remembered against them.

9. στρατόν. It might amount to some 2000 hoplites, to say nothing of seamen. It is not likely that the men of Ephesos annihilated them. A parley or self-defence or flight was possible. Nor does exector imply that the butchery was wholesale,

7. Anorela was a comparatively respectable occupation still (cp. Thuc. 1. 5): practised simply upon Carthaginians and Etruscans, it hardly amounted to more or less than a legitimate form of

18. 1. ἐνίκων. Lade was the only naval engagement in which the 'Persians' ever defeated Hellenes, for the defeat in Egypt in 454 B.c. (Thue. 1. 100 f.) was hardly a naval engagement, and the victory of Konon and the Phoenicians at Knides in 394 n.c. (Xen. Hell. 4. 3), and the successful operations of Memoon in 233 n.c. (Arrian, Anab. 2. 1), obviously need not be reckoned. The defeat at Lade was due to treachery, and the treachery to the political and commercial rivalries which divided Greeks, Acolian from Ionian, Samian from Chian, Milesian from Ephesian, and indeed Samian from Samian, and so forth. The moral of this battle was not lost upon the Athenians (c. 21 intra) nor upon their great men, Miltiades, or Themistokles (cp. 6, 109, 8, 69, et al.) and seems to (cp. 6. 109, S. 62 et al.), and seems to have reacted upon the memory and records of events, ep. cc. 12, 14 supra. 2. καl θαλάσσης. nately Hdt. does not date this oracle. Rawlinson's translation darkens obscurity by inserting "once on a time." The Argive portion of the Response was afterwards interpreted as referring to the war with Kleomenes (ep. c. 77 infra), and Stein apparently argues from the inquiry of the Argives περί σωτηρίης (ep. 5. 119) that the war with Kleomenes was in prospect: but the Argives had occasion for such inquiries both before and after the days of Kleomenes, and the divine warning was vague enough to be sure of fulfilment sometime. The excursus, or insertion on Miletos, is somewhat more definite, and might serve to fix a date for the Argive Theoria. Blakesley argues from κακών incumare toyor that the oracle belongs to the time of Kroisos and Kyros, when Miletos made a separate treaty with Kyros of which Delphi would disapprove. This hypothesis credits Delphi with extraordinary foresight and considerable patriotism, or at least loyalty to Lydia. From another point of view it may be argued that the re-ognised fulfilment of arguest that the re-organised miniment of the prophecy in the case of Miletos leads us to date the oracle shortly before or after the events of 404 n.c. The Delphic oracle already, perhaps, as afterwards certainly (ep. 7, 140), took the view attributed to Aristagoras (5, 124) and the Samians (c. 13 supro), that 'the king' was invincible. In (5. 124) and the Samians (c. 13 supra), that 'the king' was invincible. In any case the Delphians might regard Rebellion, if not Democracy, the assault on Naxos, the attempt to involve Sparta, or Alkmaionid Athens, in the struggle with Persia, the burning of the Metroon in Sardes (5. 102) as a supraint around (cn. 5. 97, 98). Or pessimi exempli (cp. 5, 97, 98). Or was the κακῶν ἐπιμήχανος ἔργων levelled at the Milesian Hekataios, a philosopher, who proposed to confiscate the treasures of Branchidae? 5. 36. Even if the xaxà referred to the acts or inaction of Miletos in 546 n.c., or included it, the oracle need not be carried back so far as to refer the Argive Theoria to the days of Anaxandrides 1. 82 (when by the way the question was not about the safety of the city but about posses-sion of Thyrea). It certainly must not be assumed that every utterance, which fairly figures the event, was a work of afterthought: ner does the oracle here given commit Delphi so deeply as to be beyond the resources of interpretation. whatever the event. But anyway the association of the destruction of Miletos in 494 B.C. with the war of Kleomenes against Argos, whether due to interpretation or to inspiration, or simply to later contamination, equally points to the conclusion that those two events were approximately synchronous, what-ever the date or dates of the Argive Theoria and of Argivo-Milesian Response. Cp. Appendix VII.

5. τοῦ λόγου. ὁ λόγος here cannot mean the (sixth, or present) Book, though the reference is to c. 77 infra: nor again, is it merely 'the particular story of Argos' (Narà τοίτον τον λόγον). The word hoyos seems here used more vaguely of the whole story, or work. Cp.

9. άγλαά δώρα, Π. 1. 213. 11. Διδύμοις. Branchidae 5. 20. Strabo, 634, relates that the temple was burnt by Xeroes and that the Branchidae delivered up the treasury to the king, two statements which look rather like alternatives. The Milesians afterwards proceeded to build an immense temple, which was never completed. Rawlinson τότε δη ταθτα τους Μιλησίους κατελάμβανε, δκότε άνδρες μέν οί πλεύνες εκτείνοντο ύπο των Περσέων εόντων κομητέων, γυναίκες δέ καὶ τέκνα ἐν ἀνδραπόδων λόγω ἐγίνοντο, ίρὸν δὲ τὸ ἐν Διδύμοισι καὶ ο νηός τε καὶ τὸ χρηστήριον συληθέντα ένεπίμπρατο. 15 των δ' έν τω ίρω τούτω χρημάτων πολλάκις μνήμην έτέρωθι του λόγου ἐποιησάμην. ἐνθεῦτεν οἱ ζωγρηθέντες τῶν Μιλησίων 20 ήγοντο ές Σούσα. βασιλεύς δέ σφεας Δαρείος κακον ούδεν άλλο ποιήσας κατοίκισε έπὶ τῆ Ἐρυθρῆ καλεομένη θαλάσση έν "Αμπη πόλι, παρ' ην Τίγρης ποταμός παραρρέων ες θάλασσαν εξιεί. της δε Μιλησίων χώρης αὐτοὶ μεν οι Πέρσαι είχον τὰ περί την 5 πόλιν καὶ τὸ πεδίου, τὰ δὲ ὑπεράκρια ἔδοσαν Καρσὶ Πηδασεῦσι εκτήσθαι.

But Strabo knew the work of Hdt.; and Hdt. is not quite explicit about the date of the burning (rôre ôh...ôxôre). 5. της & Μιλησίων χώρης. That the Greeks were wholly extirpated from Miletos seems an exaggeration. At the battle of Mykale the Persians employ the Milesians, who are presumably Hellenes and not merely 'Karians of Pedisa,' to guard the passes, 9, 92, and these Milesians did their best for the cause of Hellas on that day (9, 101). But the greatness of Miletos was past. Samos is the leading spirit of the revolt from Xerxes (ep. 9, 90, But ep. 8, 132). The primacy of Ionia passes from the mainland to the island (ep. 5, 28). Under Athenian hegemony there was probably a revival in Miletos, but it was a tributary (paying, with Leros Miletos seems an exaggeration. Aâóv τε καl Σκώρον. Originally dependent colonies of Sybaris, which may have received the exiles (ep. Busolt, (fr. G. i.* 400). Sybaris was on the gulf of Tarentum north of Kroton: Laos and Skidros across the mountains to the west, and on the 'Tyrrhene' sea. Their losses and the migration might have ruptured the commercial relations between the Sybarites and Miletos, and after 15 or 16 years it is, perhaps, not surprising that the old friendship had waned. What is remarkable is that Hdt. should point so sharp a contrast between the conduct of the Sybarites, and that of the Athenians. The passage may be an addition, due in part to western sources, a possibility rendered more probable by the asyndeton.

c. ἐξεινόθησαν. (On the formula των ήμεις ίδμεν ορ. Introduction, p. civ.) The great friendship between Sybaris and Miletos previous to 510 n.c. was doubtless largely based upon commercial interests and exchanges. How long the friendship had lasted, and whether it was embodied in legal form (σύμβολα) are open questions: it was probably not unconnected with the Chalkid-Eretrian war (cp. 5. 90) in which Kroton and Sybaris followed Samos and Miletos respectively (Busolt, Gr. C. i.² 450). Sybaris was in a position to mediate the traffic between Asia and Etruria, and to compete with the passage by the Straits, which was commanded by Chalkis and its 'friends.' As an entrepôt its advantages may be compared to those of Corinth. The wares of Asia were debarked at Sybaris and re-embarked at Laos. By this traffic Miletos, the greatest of the Ionian cities of the sixth and seventh centuries B.C. with something like a monopoly of the Black Sea traffic on the one side, and a large share of the trade with Egypt on the other, found an almost unlimited market for her exports. The Milesians night well put on mourning for the destruction of Sybaris. (See Lenormant, La Grandi-Grew, i. 217 ff. Busolt, Gr. G. i. 2401, points out that Grote lirst noticed the importance of the overland route, cp. Grote, Pt. n. c. xxii. vol. iii. p. 208. a remarkable passage.) The revival of Sybaris under Athenian auspices, and probably from the plan of the Milesian architect Hippodamos (Grote iv. 507), is the more comprehensible from the connexion between Athens and Miletes. Imperial Athens claimed the heritage and exploited the traditions of the old Ionian centres of commerce, Miletes, Chalkis, Delos, and attempted to merge old rivalries in a higher union. Therevival of Sybaris in perticular was an idea that went back to Themistokles (cp. 8, 62, Plutarch, Themist, 321, though it was only realised by Perikles: not very successfully (cp. Diodor, 12, 10). Herodotus is here on his own ground. Cp. Introduction, p. c.

But the ancedote was a celebrated one, probably told as often before as after Strabo (see references in Rawlinson, ad L.), and Strabo is not careful to quote the very carliest authority. Hepour quem titulus Suidas v. Apririxos communorat" (Nauck, Trag. Gr. Frag. p. 558). The Iprohibition recorded by IIdt, is perhaps to blame for the fact that neither fragment nor argument of the drama has survived. The drama of Phrynichos was remarkable as taking its plot from contemporary history, a new departure in dramatic composition. It was not, however, as a violation of artistic canons, or precedents, that it gave offence to the Athenians. But was it simply as a memento of their own sorrows? Were the spectators who wept the same as the dikasts who punished? Was there nothing more in the affair than Hdt, records? The suggestions that the drama may have contained, or have been interpreted as, a reproach for the desertion of Miletos, and the Ionian cause, and that the okeha kaka (ep. 7. 152 th okeha kaka . aloxiora nenointai) were not so much the wee and sufferings of Mileton as the error and shorteonings Miletes as the error and shortcomings of Athens, are too plausible to be summarily dismissed (ep. Duncker, Geach. d. Alt. vii. 88). There may have been politicians in Athens who regarded the retirement from Ionia as a blunder. Even if Themistekles was not Archon in 493 s.c., he was old enough to perceive the advantage of supporting the Ionians. On a later occasion he was choragus to Phryniches, when the latter celebrated not the woe but the victory of Athens in the but the victory of Athens in the Phoenissae (cp. Clinton, Fasti ad ann. 476 n.c., Plutareh, Themist. 5). The trial and condemnation of Phrynichos, for his drama of 403 B.c., may have been a political move, or act of revenge, by the persons who were mainly responsible for the withdrawal of the Atheniaus, or the repeated refusals (5, 103) to continue the support of the movement against the Persians: though the withdrawal may have been at the time inevitable. Cp. notes ad l. c. 9. 88642271. Technical term (cp.

This temark holds good of the date at which Hdt. is writing, but might have been inserted into the story of the Samians by Hdt. himself: not, indeed, that the geo-graphical indication is so precise as to justify us in supposing it the result of autopsy, but that the gloss-like and clumsy remark is just such an one as the author might intercalate, supposing him to have been westwards.

This obvious contrast is pointed by Aelian, V. H. 8, 17, who calls Skythes Teracos, perhaps from a misunderstanding of this perhaps from a misunderstanding of this missage, an error which bred others (ep. Periconius and I. c.). But did Skythes perhaps receive the tyrannis in Kos from Darcios! 7, 164. If we are right in identifying after K. O. Muther, Dorder, 1, 2, 171) this Skythes with that, we see that δικαιοσύνη was hereditary in the family, Kadmos the son of Skythes giving several notable proofs of it, two of which are recorded by Hdt. l. c. According to the story told 7. 164, Kadmos, son of Skythes, resigned the tyrauny in Kos and went to Sicily, and there received a city from the Samians, to wit Zankle, the name of which was changed to Messene. (That Hdt. forgets in one place (here) what he had said in another (there) is not so very strange. Up. Introduction, p. lxxiii.) Thue, 6, 4, 5 mentions the seizure of Zankle by the Samians described by Hdt., but adds that the Samians were shortly afterwards expelled by Anaxilas tyrant of Rhegion, who refeunded the city with a mixed population and re-named it Messene in honour of his own original country. As may be conjectured, it was upon this occasion that Kadmos the son of Skythes took Zankle from the men of Samos: though Freeman (Sicily, ii. p. 112) unfortunately reads μετά Σαμίων instead of παρά Σαμίων in 7. 164, and makes Kadmos help the Samians to take Zankie from Skythes! Thucydides, who had good authority for his Sicilian Archaeology, by design or accident, corrects and supplements the hints in Hdt. who appears ignerant of the subsequent fate of the Samans, or clee close sain maper, xera, though he mentions incidentally the change of name. Pausanias 4, 23, 3 f. gives the fullest account of these proceedings, but unfortunately spoils it by dating them to the 29th Olympiad in connexion with the second Messenian war. It is uncritical to say (with Rawlinson) that the narrative of Pausanias is "a mere misrepresentation of the events here narrated," for Hdt. neither here nor elsewhere narrates the expulsion of the Samians from Zaukle by Anaxilas, which is attested by Thucydides, as also the change of name to Messene, which by Hdt. is associated not with Anaxilas, but with Kadmos. If Anaxilas had anything to say to the change of name, it must have taken place before his death in 476 n.c., but Freeman (Note on "Anaxilas and the naming of Messana": Secily, vol. ii. pp. 484 ff.) suggests that Thucydides may be in error, and that the change of name may have been due to a body of Messenian exiles settled at Zankle after their expulsion from the Peloponnesos about 457 n.c. This hypothesis is quite consistent with Hdt.'s statements, but will require to be supplemented by the assumption that the Messenians were led by Kadmos, who must have laid down the tyranny at Kee at least a quarter of a century before.

τάς μέν . . υποκυψάσας, τάς δὶ . . προσηγάγοντο is not strictly grammitical; the general form of the sentence (Καρίην ἐσχον) seems to require τάτ μεν τών πολίων ὁμολογίη κτεώμενοι τάς δὰ ἀτάγκη προσαγαγώμενοι. The introduction of the adverb ἐθελοντήν transfers the action for the moment to the side of the Karians and leads to the substitution of ἐποκυψάσας for κτεώμενοι (or some such word), but the subject of the main clause reasserting itself (τάς δί, the participial description of the action of the subject is raised, by a sort of logical compensation, to the dignity of a final verb (προσηγάγωντο). Demetrins of Skepsis apud Strabonem, 603, describes the place: τειχήρες χωρίον, in the vale of the Aisepos, on the left of the stream, below Palaiskepsis) seems rather far off, to serve as a basis for operations against Chios, but it would doubtless have made an excellent bandits' nest, and the words The Xiav do not prove that the Polichne here spoken of was in Chios (The Xine Xipps) but merely that it belonged to the Chians. From its position the Idacan citadel seems to command the short land-route from the Gulf of Adramytteion to the Propontis. If the Chians had a stronghold on that route the Lesbians might have been specially anxious to cradicate them. Now the Chians had been in occupation of Atarneus for upwards of hity years, 1. 160. A monotheistic, or monistic, tendency is visible in the work of Herodotus (ep. especially 3. 108, 8. 13 and c. 98 infrat. Influences from two different sources may have contributed to augment it: (1) The Pervicus religion, so fer as understood by the Greeks (ep. 1. 131, 7. 37) and even the Pervicus Monorchy (7. 56, 293). their issue may have been connected with the events described in c. 4 supra. Histiaios was playing, or was credited with playing, a double game. A tavourite with the king, he was not a favourite with the king's right-hand men, a Megabout (5. 23), an Artaphrenes (6. 1 et al. i. Histinios was prepared to serve in Susa if he might reign in Ionia. He preferred to do the king's work with "plenty of Acolians and Ionians," rather than see it done by the Phoenicians and by the Viceroy at Sardes. Satraps and Persian generals were not always subservient to the wishes of the king. Histiaios might plot and perpetrate acts of hostality against the local authorities, and yet trust to making all good in the eyes of the central government. He may very well have brought many of the maritime states round to his views by using the Phoenician scare (c. 3 supra). The Phoenician scare (c. 3 supra). The Median and Persian grandees preferred the Phoenician interest, and were jealous of the great Greek tyrants.
29. 2. Μαλήνη. The reading is doubtful, and the spot unknown, though Kie-pert's map places it conjecturally on the Evenos, west of the Kaikos. Wesseling conjectured Kapirn or Kapirn from 7. 42: but l'awlinson's note may be thought to dispose of that. There was a place, at least in later times, on the Coast, on the borders of Pergamos, called Perperine (cp. Ramsay, Asia Minor, pp. 12, 117). One MS. reads Meyakhey,

6. δ λαβών, 'his captor.'
7. ἀνεσταύρωσαν. Having first apparently beheaded him, or at least put him to death somehow. The rapidity and suddenness with which Histiaios is bisected in the narrative is grimly humorous. There is an anacoluthon un' 78 σώμα αὐτοῦ.

8. ταριχεύσαντες. See 2. 87.

The netives (drestaipwsav Art.) do not prove that Harpagos and Artaphrenes were themselves the immediate agents. The care with which 'Benefactors' (cp.

c. 9 supra, 5, 11) were treated by the Persian king, is best illustrated in the story of Sandokes and Darcios, 7, 194.

12. θάψαι. The command comes suspiciously from the devout worshipper of Ormuzd. Though Hdt. asserts that it was a Persian practice to bury persons alive (7, 114) be is annuantly not aware. alive (7, 114), he is apparently not aware of the Persian objection to the burial of the dead (cp. 1, 140, 7, 100). But Dareios was tolerant of the religious of his various subjects, and may have directed that the remains of a Greek should be disposed of in accordance with the Greek rite: or the stricter canon of Masdaism may have been still in embryo. Cp. Perrot and Chipicz, Art in Persia,

The story of the end of Histiaios has anticipated the strict chronological sequence. The date is to be concluded a parte post. : the êros below, c. 42, is certainly 493 B.C. as calculated backwards from Marathon; and there is no change of year between cc. 31 and 12. Cp. Appendix VI.

τῷ δευτέρῳ ἔτεϊ. The spring of 493 n.e. (cp. c. 28 supra).
3. εὐπετέως. Chios, Lesbos, Tenedos taken 'without serious resistance.' Lade, Chios lacked the power, and Lesbos the will to resist.

5. tσαγήνευον τους άνθρώπους, 'the inhabitants' without regard to sex or age. Cp. c. 23 supra. This statement is highly questionable. Why should Lesbos have been 'netted' after the medism at Lade! The clumsiness of the grammar even suggests that we have here the misapplication of a general rule, or hypothesis, not a genuine tradition of the particular cases in question. Van Herwerden, indeed, brackets ὅκως ὁξ λάβοι τινά των νήσων and reads ώς δ' έκαστην or want of construction, c. 12 supra. There are material objections to the statement. Stein, by no means given to picking holes in Hdt., remarks that, impossible as it might have been to apply the Sagene in Ionia, it would have been still more impossible to apply it "on the islands of the Aegean with their masses of mountains and multitudes of clefts" (gebirgioen und schluchtens ich m Insuln). This description in fact is perhaps one of the (Samian) exaggerations, of which there are several in Holt. Cp. 3. 149, where Stein has unfortunately bracketed the word σαγηνείσαντες. That the saying should be described here, after having been taken for granted there, cannot prove that this passage was composed by the historian earlier than that, for-to say nothing of the writer capacity or caprice-such inconsequences may arise from the nature of the sources, or from differences in the public or audience (a Western audience would require to have the Sugar explained).

general statement, 1. 169 ad fin., is plainly questionable. The acquisition of Phoenicia by Kambyses (cp. 3. 19) and the conquest of Egypt had put ships at the disposal of the Great King. Samos was the first island that surrendered to the Persians, 3. 44, though the story in the l'ersians, 3, 44, though the story in 3, 120 ff. seems to imply that the Persian annexation was later, cp. 3, 130. The conquest, or more probably the surrender of Chios and of Losbos, is not expressly recorded, but seems implied as an antecedent of the story of the Scythian expedition, cp. 4, 97, 138. They are not of sufficient importance to be apprenticly requirement in the Rehisting. separately nominated in the Behistun reparately nominated in the Behistun inscription, but they may perhaps be included in 'Ionia' or in 'those which are of the sea' (Kypros!) col. i. § 6.

33. l. amalkarofoperos. The date of these operations in the Hellespont falls in any case in 493 R.v., even if it should be thought that Chios, Lesbos, and Tenedos would have been reduced immediately after leader or at least after mediately after Lade, or at least after the fall of Miletos.

2. τὰ ἐπὶ δεξιά. No details have been given since the capture of Kymae 15. 124), for the battle at + Malene (c. 20 supra) was subsequent to the advance of the Pheenicians (c. 28 supra). The revolt, started at Miletos, had spread to the 'Heilespont' as well as Acolis, and as afterwards appears (cc. 13-45 infra), had given the Thracians and Maccolonians an opportunity of recovering their independence.

 αὐτοῖτι τ. Π. Not the Pheenicians. The places on the left are of course European (al ἐν τῆ Εὐρώπη infro). Whether Hdt. could have 'orientated' them correctly is doubtful; ep. 7. 36.

4. του Ελλησπόντου. This passage shows clearly that under the term Hellespont Hdt. includes all the waters between the Aegean and the Pontes. On occasion, however, he uses the term in a stricter sense. Cp. 5, 122, 4, 85, 5, Hépulos, 5, 1.

5. Πέρινθος, 5. 1.
6. τὰ ἐπὶ Θρηίκης, α common expression in Threydides, is an ἄπαξ λεγ ίμενον in Hdt. with a somewhat different sense. The following passage from the Periplus of Skylax, c. 67 (quoted by Bushr ad læ.) is apposite: μετὰ δὲ τῆν Χερρύνησὸν ἐστι Ορρκια τείχη τάδε τρώτον Λεική ἀκτή, Τειρίστασις, Ἡρὰκλια, Γάνος, Γανίας, Νέον τείχος, Ἡρὰκκια, Γάνος, Γανίας, Νέον τείχος, Πέρινθος πόλις καὶ λιμήν, Δαμανόν τείχος, Σηλυμβρία πόλις καὶ λιμήν (Muller, theogram). Μίπ. i. 56). The description added to Perinthos and Selymbria explains the special mention of them by Hdt. the special mention of them by Hdt. The Phoenicians on this occasion perhaps believed that they were recovering and securing the water-way from which they had been excluded for generations. Yet their reluctance to pursue the Byzantine and Kalebedonian fugitives into the Pontos is observable. They simply make a clean sweep of the Hellespont, Propontis and Bospores, working round from the European to the Asiatic side.

Bugarriov had joined the revolt, 5. 103, and the expression there would cover the case of Kalchedon, and others.

15. Kúzikov, like Samos, Lesbos, and probably other towns (Sigeion, c.g.) had made terms for itself, profiting perhaps by the jealousies of rival satraps. Cp. 3. 120, 126. The Daskylean satrapy presumably corresponds to the relressorbs, 3. 20. Cp. Thue. 1. 129, and Arnold's note to Thue. 8. 5.

34. 1. Kapô(ns. Why was Kardia spared? Hawlinson says: "Cardia probably escaped at this time from its position deep in the gulf of Xeros." The meaning of this enigmatical sentence appears to be that Kardia owed its immunity to its geographical position. This explanation seems hardly adequate. Blakesley supposes that Kardia was faithful to Persia and therefore escaped. The mention of Kardia in 7. 58 illustrates its position, and that in 9. 115 the subsequent hold of the Persians upon it.

3. Miltiades, son of Kimon, son of Stesagoras, evacuated the Chersonese on the advance of the Phoenician navy: this is the clear statement of Hdt.; ep. c. 41 infra. Miltiades, son of Kypselos, is here mentioned for the first time: his patronymic suggests a tie with the Corinthian dynasty, 5, 92

5. Δόλογκο. Little more than a name. Steph. Byz. has it that they had their name from Dolonkos, a brother of Bithynos, i.e. they were one of the great group of cognate stems found on both sides of the Hellespont; ep. Giseke, Thrakisch-Pelasgische Stämme, p. 11. 6. 'Αψυθίων. Also Thracian barbarians, cp. 9, 119, practising burners sacrifice. Ainos, the town at the mouth of the Hebros (4, 90) described as a πόλις Aloλίς (7, 58), also bare the name of Apsinthes, and probably was on their territory, which lay north of the gulf of Melas, even as the Chersonese lay south. The form of the story which reverses the parts of the Dolonki and Apsinthii (see Blakesley note ad l.) deserves no credit. Δελφούς. If the Thracian Dolonki really consulted Delphi after the year 500 g.c. it may have been for the purpose of obtaining, or encouraging, a Greek settlement to make head against the Apsinthii. The Athenians were al-ready nursing ideas of expansion in the north-east. According to Diog. L. 1. 2 the idea was started by Solon. Peisis-trates and his sons entertained similar views (cp. 5. 94, 95). One is tempted to refer the matter, which Corn. Nepos narrates of Miltiades son of Kimon (vita 1), to Miltiades son of Kypseles, and to suppose that the application to Delphi emanated from the Athenians. Its transfer to the Dolonki would be an even better compliment to Miltiades and his house. According to another tradition it was Miltiades who directed the Dolonki to Delphi to obtain a sanction for the commission to him. Schol. Aristeid, pag. 209 (Fr.). τοὺς βασιλίας. That the Dolonki were under 'kings' would the better excuse the monarchy of Miltiades.

It was probably not in Delphi that Hdt. heard this story.

10. την ίρην όδον cannot be the road ή ειν 'Αθηναίοι την Πιθιάδα πέμπουσι Strabo, 422, if the Dolouki went out of their way (ἐκτράπονται) to come by Athens. But van Herwerden regards the ἐκ as "dittographia natum." That the Dolonki, if they went to Delphi at all, went con Athens is possible, though Peisistratos was not on the best terms with the oracle. The Sacred Way may be the road to Eleusis, on which, in the Deme Lakiadai, was the family house of the Philaidai (Plutarch, Kimon, 10, C. I. A. i. 179), although the Deme of their own name was near Brauron, and with it they presumably had at some time a local connexion. Thracians might very well be on the road to or from Brauron (as their port): the reference to the Sacred Way may be due to the position of the family house in Hdt,'s time. There was nothing unusual in an Athenian's having land and houses in more than one Deme (ep. Haus oullier, Via municipale en Attique, p. 67). 35. 2. τηνικαῦτα. The adventure of Miltiades will fall during the first usurpation of Peisistrates c. 559 n.c. Cp. Clinton, Fast, Hell. ii. p. 232, Toeppfer,

3. tδυνάστευε. Lykurgos, son of Aristolaides, is represented, 1. 59, as beader of the Pediaci. Probably Miltiades, son of Kypselos, was only second to him. At a later time Isagoras, son of Tisandros, that is probably a man of the Philaid lineage, was leader of the faction. See 5, 66, and c. 128 infro. Μωταίδης. This Miltiades was not the first of the name (and lineage) if Pausaniaswas right in making a Miltiades enemies, if not a coalition, to contend with; the Attic occupation of the Chersonese may well have excited the hostility of tribes and towns, on both sides the Hellespont.

3. Λαμψακηνοΐου. On Lampsakes see 5. 117. At this time Lampsakes was perhaps already under the tyranny (ep. 4. 138). But if so, the tyranty were not so loyal to Lydia as afterwards to Persia. The enmity of Lampsakes to the Philaid dynasty in the Chersonses might not be unacceptable to Peisistrates and his successors. Cp. Thue. 6. 59, 3, 4. Κροίσφ. How is the friendship of Kroisos for Milliades son of Kypselos. for the contemporary head of the Alknational family (cp. c. 125 mfra) to say nothing of Solon (1. 29), to be reconciled with the Lydian king's apparent ignorance of the condition of Athens, and that indeed shortly before his overthrow (1. 56, 59)? Miltiades, Kroisos, and the Alkmaionidae were all well thought of at Delphi. Not so, perhaps, Peisis-trates: the inconsequence in Helt. may be explained by a difference in the sources, but it remains an inconsequence.

The old name of Lampsakos was Pityoessa, changed by the Phokaian colonists to Lampsakos the Phokatan colonists to Lampsakos in honour of Lampsake, daughter of the king Mandron, who had saved them from her father's treachery. After her death she was worshipped as a deity (ώτ θεφθύων), see Plutaich, de virt. mul. p. 255, who found the story in Charon of Lampsakos (Müller, Frag. Hist. Gr. i. p. 33). No adult Lampsakene could have been at a loss for an explanation of the been at a loss for an explanation of the bitter jest of Kroisos: nor could Hdt. had

38. 2. άπαις, 'without leaving male issue,' op. 5. 48. If Miltiades son of Kypselos had a daughter, she would have been eπίκληρος, and might have been married to Stesagoras son of Kinnon, the half-brother of Miltiades. Kimon, the half-brother of Miltiades. There is, however, no mention of an επίκληρος in the case. This Stesagoras also dies āπac, and is succeeded by his full brother Miltiades, named presumably after the Philaid, son of Kypselos. The question, however, arises whether Stesagoras (c. 34 supra) the steplather of Miltiades, son of Kypselos, was not himself a Philaid! (cp. l'etersen, Hist. gent. Attic. p. 25, Toepffer, Attische the neodogie, p. 280). In that case the tie between Stesagoras Kimonias and Miltiades Kypseli would have been agnatic and not merely matriarchal. The Kimonidae, so to speak, are afterwards recognissed as Philaidae, which could hardly have been done simply under the arrangement described in the under the arrangement described in the text, without strict descent or adoption.

Adoption there may have been in any case. But it is difficult to suppose that the Philaid Miltiades had no agnates: the Finlaid Militades had no agnates: it was perhaps, however, remembered as remarkable that his nearest agnate was also his brother uterine though not paternal. In short, Stesagoras, tather of Kitmon, and Kypselos, father of Militades, may have been full brothers, and the second marriage of N or M the mother of Militades Kypseli and of Kitmon Stesagoras may have been a case of the Levirate Kypselos and Stesagoras of the Levirate, Kypselos and Stesagoras being themselves till brothers, though this fact is glossed over in the tradition of a later time under the influence of later law. In any case the stress laid upon the uterine tie is noticeable. Ideas and customs connected with the matriarchate died very hard at Athens; cp. c. 131 infra, and M'Lennan's Kinship in Ancient Greece, which makes no use of this case (Studies in Anc. Hist. 1886, pp. 195 ff.).

This of Thracians, and even the Dolonki had several 'kings,' c. 34 supra. This Hegesipyla, who has a Greek or Graecised name, was the mother of Kimon the victor at the Eurymedon (ep. Plutarch, vil. Kim. 4), and perhaps, by a second marriage, the mother of Oloros the Athenian, father of Thucydides the historian; Kimon who was Strategos in 477 n.c. may have been born about 477 p.c. may have been born about 508-7 p.c. The marriage of Militades and Hegesipyle might have taken place about the time of the expulsion of Hippins from Athens. Milliades died about 488-7 n.c. Hegesipyla, then perhaps 35-40 years old, may have con-tracted a fresh marriage in the same family. Thucydides the historian might have been the grandson of this lady, and her second husband, and quite old enough in 431 B.c. to form the design of recording the war which began in the spring of that year. He could not then however have been (pace Pamphila apud Aul. Gell. 15. 23) forty years old (though he must have been at least thirty in 424 s.c.), nor could be be identified with Thucydides the colleague of Pericles in the Simian war (Thuc, 1, 117). That the historian was connected with the house of Kimon and with Thrace may

40. 1. οὐτος κτλ. This chapter is a mass of craces. The material difficulties are aggravated by ambiguities of expressions. sion, and as in other like cases (cp. c. 57 infra) it seems not unreasonable to sup-pose that Hdt. is reproducing traditions which did not present a lucid argument or perspective to his own mind. We are in fact in the presence of an obscure selfcontradiction or a clumsy tautology.

The central sentence of the chapter is clear enough. It states as a matter of fact that the nomal Scyths, having received provocation from Dareios, advanced as far as the Cherconese, and that Miltiades fled before them. Seyths afterwards retired, and Miltiades was restored by the Dolonki. Whether these statements are accurate is a further question: they are not obscure.

Besides this clear statement of possible matters of fact, we have three sentences, two before and one after, of the utmost obscurity, in which vague and abstract terms are used (alla xaleπώτερα—τῶν καταλαβύντων πρηγμάτων —τούτων—ταῦτα—τῶν τότε μιν κατεχόντων). Difficult questions arise as to the significance of these terms, and as to their relations one to another.

Any one reading the first sentence of the chapter would suppose that the words vewstlucv elyledge referred to the first alvent of Miltiades in the Chersonese. So in fact Rawlinson in his translation understands the words. The question remains, to what events, or matters of fact, do the two phrases Two Katula Bov-TWW (v. 1. KATEX GOTTON PR, adopted by van Herwerden and Holder) πρηγμάτων and άλλα χαλεπώτερα refer? Rawlinson and Δλλα χαλεπώτερα refer? Rawlinson takes τῶν κατεχύντων πρηγωίτων το refer to the advance of the Phosnician fleet (in 493 n.c.) and ἄλλα χαλεπώτερα to the advance of the Seyths; Hott, wishing to say that, bad as might be what Miltiades experienced from the Phoenicians, it was not so bad as what he had experienced from the Seyths, "three (sic) years earlier." According to this interpretation representation representation representation. interpretation των κατεχ bυτων πρηγμάτων and rottor and tor thre per kategortor refer to one and the same event or series of events (flight from the Phoenicians), while alla xalenwrepa and rairs refer to another series of events, that namely specified in the sentence $\Sigma \kappa i \theta a i \gamma \dot{a} \rho$. . Solow. The principal objections to this interpretation are three: (1) reworl is nonsense, or, as Rawlinson says, shows
"a curious laxity of expression, or a curious forgetfulness of dates." (2) The argument is inverted and well right absurd. 'Miltiades had not been long in the Chersonese when something occurred worse than what (afterwards) happened to him, for, less than three years before being driven clean out by the Phoenicians, he had been obliged by the Seyths to retire for a time, but was afterwards restored.' (3) Grammatically, can τῶν κατεχύντων πρηγμάτων refer to a period subsequent to the date of κατελάμβανε δέ μιν ἐλθύντα άλλα χ.! If the text here were τῶν τότε μιν κατεχύνταν, referring to μέχρι τότε c. 34 μηντα, such a sense might be got into it, though even then we might expect κατελελαβάρεε for κατελάμβανε, i.e. κατελαμβάρει κές μιν ελθύντα άλλα τῶν τότε με κατελάμβανες χαλαπότερα.

5 βασιλέος Δαρείου συνεστράφησαν καὶ ήλασαν μέχρι τῆς Χερσονήσου ταύτης τούτους ἐπιόντας οὐκ ὑπομείνας ὁ Μιλτιάδης ἔφευγε Χερσόνησον, ἐς δ οἴ τε Σκύθαι ἀπαλλάχθησαν καὶ ἐκεῖνον Δύλογκοι κατήγαγον ὀπίσω. ταῦτα μὲν δὴ τρίτω ἔτεῖ πρότερον ἐὶ ἐγεγόνεε τῶν τότε μιν κατεχύντων. τότε δὲ πυνθανόμενος εἶναι

As the text stands the first sentence of the chapter says that or ever Miltiades had been long in the Chersonese he was over-taken by greater hardships than he ex-perienced before (deaths of his father, and brother, and the difficulties of succession). The text then went on to say, until Stein inserted mpb, that less than three years after his arrival he was expelled by the Seyths, and remained in exile (Eperge), how long it is not stated, until he was brought back by the Dolonki, only to be again driven out, less than three years afterwards, by the Phoenicians. The objections to this interpretation are two: (1) the difficulty and indeed impossibility of making any rational chronology; (2) the obvious intention of the author to supply in the list sentence raira μèν ởη κτλ. an elucidation of the text preceding, and the consequent necessity to take the repeated rpirw ere as an identical date with the former τρίτφ έτα. If we might omit the whole sentence τρίτω μέν γάρ έτει τούτων Σκύθας έκφεύγει, the difficulties would be solved, save that (1) record would remain a stumbling-block, and (2) the Seythian invasion would still be problematic. The sense would then run: 'Before Miltiades had been long in the Chersonese he had a worse ex-perience than any (in Athens, Thrace, or Scythia) that befell him so far. For the Scyths invaded the Hellespont, and he had to retire and remained (many years, 510-495 !!) in exile, until the Dolonki restored him, two years before the advance of the Phoenicians.

Feeling the grave objections to these interpretations we may follow Stein in understanding έληλύθεε and έλθόντα, in the light of κατήγαγον όπίσω beb w, ε equivalent to κατεληλέθει and κατελθίντα, and in inserting προ, or at least interpreting τρίτω έτει τούταν as τρίτω έτει πρότερον. We thus obtain a portactly consistent and intelligible sense, νεωτιμέν refers to his flight and restoration (τών καταλαβώντων πρηγμάτων από ταιταία about 496-5 n.c. some two y ars or so before the advance of the Phoenicians (άλλα χαλεπώτερα and τών τέτε μεν κατελώντων). The sense or argument then runs: Miltiades who was tyrant of the Chersonese (c. 34 supra) at the time had not been long there, having been restored to his tyranny after an exile (due to the Scythic incursion) only some two years before; and he had now to evacuate the territory before the advancing Phoenicians, this time never to return. In spite of Cohet's fotorem est conjunger κατελάμβανε πῶν κατελάβενων (Μπεποσμά, N.S. xii. p. 155), we therefore adhere to the reading of ABC (a) on sensible grounds.

A further and material question remains, whether the Seyths really made their appearance on the Hellespont about the year 496 B.C. a year or two before the suppression of the Ionian revolt? If so, Miltiades, Sparta (cp. c. 84 infra) the Greek rebels, all less a grand opportunity. But this visit of the Seythians in their wrath is singularly tardy and ineffective; and Miltiades was the last man the Seyths should have penalised, if only they had known his account of the affair at the bridge, 4, 137. Hence Blakesley's suggestion deserves favour that the Seythians have been substituted for Thracians by the tradition, though we need not followhim in supposing that the Thracians who drave Miltiades out about 496 B.c. were the same who had just put an end to Aristagoras (497 B.C., cp. 5, 125). In any case the fortunes and acts of Miltiades between the Seythic expedition in 512 B.C. and his return to Athers in 463 B.C. are almost a blank. Cp. c. 137 infra.

kedon, Prokennesos, Artake were visited by the Phoenicians before they completed the devastation of the Chersonese. Militades' flight might here be supposed to have been postponed till after the return of the Phoenicians to the Hellespont from the Bosporos. The mention of Tenedos, however, carries us back to c. 31, and makes it appear that the flight of Miltiades was upon the first approach of the Phoenicians from the south. His starting from Kardia (rather than Sestos, or one of the Hellespontine towns) supports that conclusion. Cp. the movement of Histinios from Thasos, c. 28 supra.

(1) the institution of (commercial) treaties establishing δικαί (ἀπο συμβόλων) throughout Ionia, and suppressing all private or local warfare and piracy. (For samples of such treaties clsewhere, later, see Hicks, Manual of Inscript. No. 31.) (2) A new causus and assessment of tribute, which Holt, appears to say was still in existence and of force in his own day, and indeed at the time of writing

In regard to the first of these measures it is probable that such arrangements were already in force between at least some of the Ionian cities, and perhaps between the states represented at Nau-kratis (ep. 2. 178, c. 21 supra). But the arrangement may have been revived and extended by Artaphrenes at this time. In any case the precedent would be welcome at Athens. In regard to the second measure, it is likely enough that a new assessment was made, after the reduction of Ionia, and the other revolved tributaries, Hdt. himself stating that they had been tributary previously for about the same amount (ep. 3. 90). The further statement that this census was still in force gives rise to questions which can only be hypo-thetically solved. Blakesley took the thetically solved. Blakes by took the statement as "decisively proving" the subjection of the Asiatic Hellenes to the king of Persia, at a time when the restoration of their liberty by Athenian arms was a favourite topic with Athenian orators. But did the unhappy Ionians then pay tribute twice over, to Persia and to Athens, at the same time! Grote maintains that no Greek city on the coast paid tribute to Persia between 476 and 412 n.c., cp. Thuc. 8. 5, 5, and explains this passage as meaning that the tribute was assessed, but not paid! Rawlinson's polemic against Grote is here conclusive: Hdt. could not have been ignorant whether tribute was paid or not, and would not have expressed himself as he has done, had he meant that the claim was made but not recognised after 476 p.c. Moreover Thue. 1. 138, though not referring strictly to Ionian cities, may be quoted against Grote. When Bawlinson goes on to date the emancipation of the Greek cities on the mainland as late as 149 p.c. and to compete it with a Greek cities on the mainland as lot-as 440 B.C. and to connect it with a (fabulous) "treaty of Cyprus" his view requires correction. The argument from the Athenian Tribute lists points to the conclusion that the Greek cities in Ionia and Karia remained subjection and tributary to Persia till the latter of the Eurymedon in 465 p.c. The effect of that battle was the enlargement of the Ionian tribute, by the inclusion of the forman tribute, by the inclusion of many cities on the main, and the addition of the Karian region. Some ten years later, however, the crushing disaster on the island of Prosepitis 1 d (as Duneker has made probable) to the transfer of the treasure from Delos to Athens for safety, and to the loss of z large number of the tributary cities on the Asiatic main, which passed back probably to the Persians. Under Perikles the Confederacy suffered dimi-Perikles the Contesteracy suffered direct mution in area, but many cities on the mainland continued to pay tribute to Athens down to the Peace of Nikias, and later (C. I. A. i. pp. 226 ff.). Whether this passage in Hdt. refers to the condition of the Ionian states before 485 n.c. or after 454 n.c. or both is 405 n.c. or after 454 p.c., or both, is not quite clear, but it is on the whole more probable that it was written after the later date, and there would then never have been any need to revise it. In no case is the passage satisfactory, for it is not sufficiently explicit. Hdt. refers only to 'the Ionians'; of Dorians, Acolians, Karians he says nothing. The conduct and fortunes of the Dorians here as throughout the period are unnoticed. Even in regard to 'the Ionians,' he does not make it plain whether the islanders or any of them are included. He is only concerned to put on record the fact that payments were still being made on the assessment of Artaphrenes. (For the facts in regard to the Athenian tribute, Robler, Abhand, der Berlin. But the Persuan commanders in Asia Minor can hardly have been actually eashiered; possibly Mardonios was ap-pointed commander in chof. The conpecture that he superseded Artaphrenes as satrap in Sardis (P. Krumbholz, De Asiae min. satcap. p. 26) is not satisfactory. He is here named for the first time. This passage has been taken to prove that Hdt, is here answering criticisms passed. upon the story of the Debate as told by him 3. 80 ff., and that consequently that portion of his work was written and published before this passage (op. A. Kirchhoff, Entstelangszeit, p. 11). The proof is not conclusive, for in 3, 80 lldt, remarks expressly that the speeches of Otanes and the others were regarded by some persons as incredible and unauthentic: he is auswering the critics already there, and their critique need not have been directed against his own work in the first instance. The remark there is, indeed, farther-reaching than the remark here: there he defends all the speeches, here he refers only to the bere thesis of Otanes. As far then as this point is concerned this passage might have been written before the passage in Bk. 3. Cp. Introduction, p. xeiv.

here posited between the political reform of Mardonios for Ionia in 492 B.C., and the supposed programme of Otanes for Persia in 521 B.C., so far from lending colour to the latter, reinforces the suspicion that Herodotus - who was not a Hallam or a Stubbs-has misunderstood the real or supposed action understood the real or supposed action of Mardonios on this occasion. It is possible that the supposed 'democracies' of Mardonios are little more than the 'liberties of jurisdiction' of Artaphrenes c. 42. It is, however, more probable that a further reform, perhaps dictated by the king and enforced by Mardonios, was made in the local government of Ionia. The monarchical city-governors may have been set aside in favour of elective been set aside in favour of elective magistrates, councils, and so forth. Oligarchy and the oligarchs were at this time anti-medic in Ionia (see c. 14 supra). The democratic tyrannis had not shown itself perfectly trustworthy, at least in the case of Miletos, and the Persian satraps and generals may have been jealous of the city despots. It is, however, to be observed that the tyrannis is still found afterwards in the Greek cities subject to Persia (c. 25 supra, 7. 98 f., 8. 132) and πάντας is plainly an exaggeration. Hdt. obviously misconceives the act ascribed to Mardonios as well as its motive and results. From his own point of view his argument would have been stronger if Gobryas, not Otanes, had been the reputed advocate of democracy; but Gobryas and his house were probably too closely connected with the king to make that possible.

The king might very well meditate the reduction of Thasos without issuing a carteblanche for the conquest of Hellas or of Europe. In any case, Thasos was an obvious stepping-stone, if not the very next step, westwards. Its reduction had been already attempted if not accomplished by Histiaios, and he had raised the blockade at the approach of the Phoenicians, c. 28 supra.

5. Maxeovas. This summary account of the reduction of Macedon is surprising in the light of the story above (5. 17-21) concerning the previous incorporation of Macedon, in the days of Amyntas. Nothing has been said of any revolt or secession of Macedon in the interval: nothing is said of any heroism of Alexander on this occasion though he is now on the throne. It might be that with years Alexander had learnt wisdom, or changed his policy: but it may be that the story above is fictitious, or at least grossly exaggerated. See notes ad l.

10. aloχρῶς ἀγωνισάμενος. That the fleet suffered severely in the storm off Athos may be regarded as certain. With that exception, which was hardly a disgrace, the expedition of 192 a.c. was a brilliant success. It had cost four or five campaigns to quell the Ionians and recover Miletos. One summer was sufficient for the conquest or recapture of Thrace and Macedon, and the addition of the wealthy Thasas to the empire. Helt, with more justice elsewhere (7, 9 a) allows Mardonies to claim credit for the operations of this year, which, as Hdt. himself acknowledges (7, 108), were substantially successful. Such inconsequences in the record viewed as a whole illustrate the vitiated and 'pragmatic' character of the author's discrepent sources, and show that he himself was not careful to introduce a complete harmony, which could only have been attained by still more unscrupulous pragmatism. Θασίους. This need for fresh demands on Thases after its surrender in the previous year is remarkable. Mardonios, or rather the fleet, incorporates Thases in the empire without striking a blow, and yet in the very next year the dismantling of the forti-fications, the surrender of the fleet, are demanded of the Surrender of the fleet, are demanded of the Thasians, as securities against their rebellion. Such a course of affairs is not, of course, impossible: but in view of the obvious fact that the story of Mardonios's expedition in 492 s.c. (cc. 43-45) is apparently drawn from a single source, while the passage (cc. 46, 47) shows the marks of a wholly distinct origin especially in a wholly distinct origin, especially in the autobiographical and local details, it is fair to suspect that in the two passages on the treatment of Thasos we have two different accounts of one set of events to be dated 492 n.c., and that the annals of 491 n.c. only begin with c. 48. The Abdera in Thrace was, according to tradition, Hellenised from Riazomenae and recolonised by the Teians about 541 n.c., 1. 168. But the coins are of the Phoenician standard, which points to the early existence of a Phoenician emperium in situ. (Cp. Head, Hist. Num. p. 219.) The proximity of the Phoenicians in Thases, and elsewhere, confirms the Phoenician character of the first settleparently to the mines in the island of Thases only. The passage proves of course a visit to Thases, but unfortunately does not enable us to date it: Hdt. can hardly have seen the island before the Athenian conquest in 463 s.c., but might have been there any time during the next twenty years, perhaps on the voyage to the Pontos.

five generations before the birth of Hellenic Herakles, a date based upon the genealogies, cp. 4, 147, 5, 50 f. The subsequent Hellenic colonists were Parians (Thuc. 4. 104, 4). Their oekist was Telesikles, father of Archilochos the lambist, Euseb. Praep. Ev. 5, 33, 6, 7 (ed. Teubn. vol. i. pp. 261, 293), and the Parian occupation may be dated to the Parian occupation may be dated to the last quarter of the 8th century a.c. Cp. Clinton, Fast. 'Kulliste' as the old name of Thera 4. 147 supra, which Thasos 'the most beautiful island in the Aegean' (Tozer) would better have deserved). There was a town in Africa named Oazia (Ptol. 4. 3, 3), and a district in Spain named Thasic (Plin. 6. 10, 5), and Hdt. says that in Tyre was a temple of 'Thusian' Herakles, 2. 44. The name appears to be cognate to Tarsus (Oazoōi, Joseph. A. J. 1. 6), Tarshish, Tartessos, et sim., and has presumably a Phoenician origin. The personification of 'Thasos' is, however, doubtless a Greek conceit.

4. vyouêrai. Samos (c. 25 supra), Chios, Lesbos, Tenedos (c. 31 supra), Thasos (c. 47 supra) have been accounted for. Probably we shall be safe in concluding that Lemnos, Imbros (Samothrace), Paros, imitated or anticipated the prudence of Thasos and Aigina. The inhabitants of Naxos (c. 96 infra) and Delos (c. 97 infra) hardly act like subjects secure of protection: but the account of Delos in particular is not free from suspicion.

6. Asquato. This appeal by Athens to Sparta in the summer of 491 B.C. against Aigins is a notable recognition by the Athenian Democracy of the Spartan Prostasia. If it was made on the suggestion of Themistokles, perhaps one of the Strategi elected in 490 s.c., it would have been of a piece with his action and policy ten years later. The story of Themistokles and Krios and 'the Medism of the Aiginetans,' 8. 92, supports this hypothesis. thesis. But perhaps on this occasion

50. 2. Κλομένης δ Α. β. 4. Σ. The elaborate description of Kleomenes here would appear to be due to one, or more, of three causes: (1) Hdt. preserves the superfluous detail from his source; or (2) does not expect his narrative to be redd, or listened to, continuously; or (3) wishes to add emphasis, and to heighten the effects of the king's re-

10. απελαυνόμενος. Cp. 5. 94. The fact that Kleomenes retires from Aigina to return with the other king and claim the hostages (c. 73 infra) implies that he admitted the technical validity of the objection of Krios. The story not only ignores the law established ό δέ οί το εον εφρασε. ο δε Κλεομένης προς αυτον έφη "ήδη νῦν καταχαλκοῦ ὧ κριὲ τὰ κέρεα, ὡς συνοισόμενος μεγάλω какю."

Έν δὲ τῆ Σπάρτη τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον ὑπομένων Δημάρητος 51 ό 'Αρίστωνος διέβαλλε τον Κλεομένεα, έων βασιλεύς καὶ ούτος Σπαρτιητέων, οἰκίης δὲ τῆς ὑποδεεστέρης, κατ' ἄλλο μὲν οὐδὲν ὑποδεεστέρης άπο γαρ του αυτου γεγόνασι κατά πρεσβυγενείην δέ κως

according to Hdt. 5, 75 about fifteen years, but is suspicious in itself, since there would be other ways of con-vincing the Aiginetans that the king was not acting ultra vires or without a commission, and it is not likely that Kleomenes made his appearance in Aigina absolutely alone. The story is hardly from an Athenian source. The stress laid upon the Athenian recog-nition of the Spartan προστασία, the wittieism of Kleomenes, are not points on which Athenian tradition would insist. Nor is it likely from the turn of expression (προδόντες την Ελλάδα) that the Aiginetans preserved the story of their own disgrace. Demarates does not come well out of the story, or it might have been traced to that 'Pergamene' source, from which probably several of Hdt.'s anecdotes about Dem-Aratos were derived. (Cp. c. 70 infra, Kenophon, Hell. 3. 1, 6, Pausanias 3. 7, 7.) The most obvious hypothesis remaining is that the story is from Spartan sources, in the first or second degree: albeit a Delphic tradition seems also a possible authority. (Cp. cc. 68, 75, 5. 89.) See Appendix VIII. $$ 4, 5.

51. l. toôrov rôv xpóvov, i.c. during the absence of Kleomenes in Aigins, summer of 491 n.c. The narrative is, however, at once interrupted by an excursus upon the origin of dual royalty at Sparta, and is not resumed until c. 61 infra.

entioned 5. ro. 2. διβαλλε, 5. 96, etc. The 3. υποδεεστέρης. 3. υποδειστέρης. The inferior dignity, if not power, of the Prokleid house is here clearly asserted. That the two houses were descended from the twin sons of Aristodemos and Argeir may be regarded as an actiological fiction to account for the duality of the kingship at Sparta. According to universally received tradition the Spartans were Dorians, while their kings of both houses were Achaians. This tradition, like many others, looks like a legend to give the Dorian conquerors a better title to the soil. (Cp. 1. 67, 68, 7. 159.) But in no degree does it account for the dual kingship. Feeling a difficulty in believing that the Dorian invaders had no leaders or chieftains of their own stock, some modern critics have supposed that the royal houses were both Dorian and represented the fusion of two independent Dorian communities (so Duncker, G. dcs Alt. v.5 254). Against this view may be urged the objections that it involves the existence of a second Dorian settlement in Laconia, that it ignores the 'Achaian' claim of the kings, and the undoubtedly Achaian, or at least prace Dorian and anti-Dorian, elements in Spartan institu-tions and society. The most reasonable hypothesis seems to be that one of the royal houses was non-Derian, and the other Derian, and that in the dual kingship was preserved a monument of the compromise upon which the historic Spartan state was founded. No other theory so well explains the popularity of royalty at Sparta, its duality, its Achaian claim, and the constant feud of the houses. It was popular, for in it was represented the traditions and interests of a majority of the population. It was dual, because the Dorian house was not dethround, though the Achaian house was re-cognised as 'the elder.' Derian oli-garchs would not be anxious to aggrandise a monarch even of their own stock. The Achaian claim was half or more than half justified, though the kings of the 'elder' house may have been most conscious of it (ep. 5. 72 supra). The Perian house was absorbed into the Herakleid pedigree: the 'twin' theory, put forward to explain the duality of the kingship. effaced the alien origin of the 'younger house. If this theory is to be rejected. there will be something to be said for regarding the Achaian (i.e. non-Dorian) descent of both houses as historical. There is nothing strange in the belief that the Dorians were under non-Dorian leaders and kings: how many reigning houses at the present day are of the same stock as their subjects? If it be said, the present state of Europe is the result of a long and complicated history, it may be answered that the Peloponnesos was highly civilised, and had a long history behind it, when the barbarous Dorian spearmen it, when the barbarous Dorian spearmen swept into the land, and overthrew government and culture. The term Achaian is used above without prejudice: cp. 5. 72, 4. 147 ff. For modern literature on the subject, see Busolt, Gr. G. i. 2546, K. F. Hermann's Lehrbuch, i. 158 ff.

We can hardly admit (vide Bähr, ad l.) that Hdt. collected the various local traditions about Lakonia, much less that all such traditions agreed in contraall such traditions agreed in contra-dicting the 'poets.' This was settled by a device and observation which, had it been sooner thought of, would equally have settled the major question of the sole succession! Thus the story well-

It originated, per-haps, among Hellenes in Egypt, of whom some were Dorians, or quasi-Dorian. Cp. 2.178. Yet reminiscences of old connexions with Egypt might have lived on through the Dorian invasion and conquest, and have at least reinforced or prepared the way for the speculations of the Greeks in Egypt under the 26th Dynasty.

Between γράφω and τούτους Blakesley

Hdt. is, however, verbally incorrect in saying that the Perseidae in their day were reckoned Hellenes, as the Hellenic name apparently first entered the Peloponnesos with the Dorians. Substantially he may be right: the Perseids were not 'barbarians.' Thucydides, however, has in this matter stated the case more accurately, 1. 3.

8. 8 vyrc0. Zeus was the father of Perseus. The genealogy of his mother Danae, daughter of Akrisios, whose forebears were Egyptians (cp. next c.) carried the Perseids back to Egypt. Hdt. only supplies certain links in this chain: Lynkeus and Danaos (2. 91) who establish a dynasty in Argos are ancestors of Perseus. Hdt. treats the Danaid legend, which connected Argos with Egypt, as notorious (cp. 2. 91, 171, 182) and well he might, as there was not only an Epic Danais, but the dramatists popularised the legend, though the Supplices of Aischylos is our only trophy from their labours on this theme. On the other side, neither does Hdt. exhibit the connexion between Perseus and Herakles father of Hyllos. Amphitryon and Alkmene are both Perseids from Argos, one genera-tion removed from Perseus. The Hesiodic Shield of Herakles told the story. Herakles had to serve the Perseid Eurystheus, to whom succeeded the Pelopid Atreus, the two being related on the female side (cp. Thuc. 1. 9). Thus the Pelopids, too, were connected with the Perseids and Egypt. (Menelaos in Egypt, 2. 118.) The overthrow of the Pelopid dynasties by the Herakleids (with the help of their Dorian followers) is a return and a recovery, not merely because the Herakleids represent the elder branch of the Perseids, but because Herakles and Hyllos had claimed their rights and been worsted by the younger Perseid Eurystheus. (Consult particularly Grote: Part 1. c. 4, and Clinton, Fast. Hell. vol. i., especially the table on p. 101.) The kings in Sparts were not merely of Perseid and Egyptian origin, but also through Argeia, mother of Eurysthenes and Prokles, have a further connexion with Thebes, and with the (Phoenician) Kudmeans. In fact, if it were not for the intervention of the (Hellenic) Zeus as father first of Perseus and then of Herakles, there would not be much to say for the Hellenic origin of the kings of the Dorians.

3. Hepoe's 'w' 'Aoo'pios. The 'Persian' view is that Perseus and his ancestors were 'Assyrians,' and that he was the first of the family to 'become a Hellene.' According to the 'Persean' legend given in 7. 150, Perses, the eponym of the Persians, was a son of Porseus, son of Danae, and Andromeda, daughter of Kepheus. Kepheus is the son of Belos (7. 61). According to the genealogy in 1. 7, Belos is father of Ninos, and son of Alkaios son of Herakles. This Herakles would be the Asiatic or Tyrian Herakles not the Greek, 2. 44. The Syrian and Assyrian connexion is through Andromeda not Perseus, and the argument in 7. 150 implies the Argive origin of Perseus. That is also the implication of the passage 7. 61. According to the story here Perseus has nothing to say to Danae or to Akrisios. That the kings or chieftains of the Dorians were really of 'Assyrim' or Egyptian descent is more improbable than that they were of non-Dorian origin. The 'Egyptian' hypothesis was the common Greek view; but the license of conjecture practised by the 'Persians' is an indication of the way in which these stories or genealogies originated or developed. The Egyptian origin of the Herakleids is, perhaps, largely a product of the attempt to connect the Greeks and their civilisation with the oldest and wisest folk of antiquity, of which we have other examples in the Dodona legend, and the Egyptian origin of the Hellenian onenclature of the Deities, 2, 50, 54 ff. At the same time it should be recognised that not merely tradition banchaeology points to a real intercourse between Egypt and Greece, particularly Argos, long before the days of Psamatik I. (Cp. P. Gardner, New Chapters in Greek History, esp. ce. v., vii.) The Phoenicians may have been the carriers and go-betweens in a later 'middle age,' but the probabilities now point more and more to a belief in early movements and intercourse between Europe and Egypt (ep. F. Petrie, J. H. S. xii. 190 ff. 1891). Hough it is not at present credible that any Egyptian dynasty was established in Greece. So freely, in fact, were these obscure but real connexions handled by the contemporaries of Herodotus that Argos itself was made the ancestral home of the Danaids, whose advent there is consequently a return to their native land (Aischylos, Sapp. 15 ff.). Cp. Hdt. 1. 1, where lo is at home in Argos. Io is the mother of Epapheo (ep. 3, 27) from whom Aigyptos and Danaog are descended.

56. 1. yépea. The notable passage which follows on the yépea of the Spartan kings (cc. 56, 57, 58) can hardly be considered as complete or accurate, and might, perhaps, have been better arranged. It was, however, as the author has just asserted, the first essay upon the subject. The scheme in Hdt.'s mind apparently divided itself under the heads of privileges: (A) before death, (B) after death. (A) is subdivided into privileges, (1) in war, (2) in peace (van Herwerden would bracket the lephala c. 57 infra as a gloss). (B) is not sub-classified. The most direct parallel to this passage is supplied by Xenophon, Rep. Laced. cc. xiii., xv.

2. Σπαρτιήται δεδώκασι seems to imply that these γέρεα were of positive institution (contrast δέδσται c. 58 infra), the rather seeing that these 'Egyptians' έλαβον τὰς Δωριέων βασιληίας. Hdt. does not say that the rights and duties enumerated are a residuum surviving from a time when the king was much more powerful; still less does he mean that these privileges have been but are not now given. The duplication of the king ship may have been accompanied, or followed, by not merely a de facto limitation and diminution of the royal power, but by an express contract, or Rhetra, on the subject. That the dual royalty was believed to have been of distinct institution seems implied in the passage quoted c. 52 supra, from Thucydides, 5. 16, and, indeed, in the story given by Hdt. of its origin just above. The contractual basis of the Spartan kingships was attested by the menstrual oath, Xenoph. op. c. xv. 7 ὁ δὲ δρκος ἐστὶ τῷ μὲν βασιλεῖ κατὰ τοὺς τῆς πόλεως κειμένους τόμους βασιλείων, τῷ δὲ πόλε ἐμπεδορκοῦντος ἐκείνου ἀστυφέλικτον τὴν βασιλείων παρέξεων.

tρωσύνας δύο. Do these specially concern τὰ ἐμπολέμια, or concern them at all? Perhaps the άγος which is incurred by any one thewarting the kings on the war-trail may be connected with their hieratic functions. Xen. op. ε. xiii. 2 represents the king as sacrificing to Zeus ἀγήτωρ and to Athene, when

How these two priesthoods were held, whether jointly or severally, and so forth, is unfortunately not stated. There was a special point no doubt in kings (διογενεῖς διογενεῖς) being invested with priesthood of Zeus, who remained a βασιλεύς even in democratic times and places. (Cp. Aristot. Pol. 1. 2, 7, 1252b.) The Spartan kings in particular were, as Herakleids, his descendants, and Zeus was their ancestor. The Herakleid kings of Macedon had a similar relation to the Bottiaean Zeus, and the Aeakid dynasty in Epiros to the Dodonaean (Preller, Griech. Mythologie, i. 119). The relation of the Athamantidae to the Laphystian Zeus (7. 197), of the ancestors of Isagoras to the Karian Zeus (5. 66), and the remark of the Hellespontine to Xerxes (7. 56) may be compared. Add the satire on the 'Olympian' Perikles Aristoph. Acharn. 530 (which might partly insinuate a charge regat appetendi).

Zeus Lakedaimon Preller (l.c.) fancifully explains as the god-king from whom the Lakedaimonian and Spartan Basileia was deduced; Zeus Uranios as the king-god of the polity in the heavens. With the surname Lakedai-

mon Stein compares Zeds 'Agaulurwr, Z. Αμφαρασς, Z. Αμφικτόων, Z. Πρακλής, Z. Τροφώνιος. There is a degree of localisation in the Λακεδαίμων which makes it, perhaps, unique. Whether the combination is a kenosis of Zees or an apothesis of Aascoalpur may be doubted. Is it possible that Zees Aascδαίμων was something more than an enchorial, that he was even a chthonian deity! The cult of Zees Ochderos is attested by the μεγάλα θέρἀνια of which colebration there is epigraphic evidence. See Prelber, i.³ p. 110 n., Wide, Lakunische Kulte (1893), p. 2. Wide (op. cit. p. 23) remarks that (1) the cult of Zeus in Sparta is important, in the rest of Lakenia unimportant, primitive and even 'chthonic'; (2) Zeus is marphor of the Herakheids: and therefore Zeus was a chief god of the Dorians: a non sequitur, ep. 3. και πόλεμον . . ἐνέχεσθαι. Hdt. asserts that the kings could make war when and where they pleased, and that it was seerilege for any Spertiate (Ephers, Gerusia, Apella) to stay it. It is not quite plain whether we are to It is not quite plain whether we are to understand that both kings acting together had this power, or that each acting separately possessed it. In either case the statement is hardly credible. It is true that in 5, 49 ff. Hdt. tells a story implying that about 500 m.c. Kleomenos might of his own accord have made war on the great King in the heart of Asia; and in 5, 74 seems to imply that about 507 m.c. Kleomenes put in motion the whole r4 seems to imply that about 507 f.c., Kleomenes put in motion the whole Peloponnesian confederacy. But those stories cannot be taken as accurate representations, see notes ad H. On the other hand in 5. 64 Kleomenes is appointed to command in the Atticwar. It is not to the king that Philippides applies in 490 n.c., c. 105 on/ra (but consult note at L.). The second Persian war is plainly not second Persian war is plainly not conducted on the royal initiative, still less the Peloponnesian wars afterwards. The appointment of com-manders-in-chief other than the kings implies the diminution of the royal authority and initiative. In 431 a.c. the king has not even a veto on the declaration of war (Thue, 1, 87). Yet there is probably some ground for the misstatement of Hdt. The fiction that the king or kings had full responsibility in all matters of warfare was probably a convenient survival, and coloured the stories though it may not have affected the action of the Spartans. The really sovran power of the king in the field (though even this had been invaded before Hdt,'s day, ep. 9, 70), which on a long campaign might really aggrana long campaign might really aggrandise the royal power considerably (ep. Thuc. 8, 5), coloured the representation of the king's power over the inseption of the campaign. The needus operandi and similar points may have been in the main within the competence of the king on service, though considerable degrees of inseparation ware on record (ep. 9. subordination were on record (ep. 9. 53). In short, a fiction which may possibly have corresponded to the facts in the days when Sparta was waging almost annual wars with its next-door neighbours was perpetuated, for various reasons, into a time when the condi-tions and problems of Spartan warfure had become much larger and more complex, while the power of the kings had suffered diminution, directly and indirectly. It is hardly credible that the alliance with Kreises was made by the king or kings of the day; or even that the interference of the Spartans against the Peloponnesian tyrants (ep. 5, 92) was undertaken on the royal initiative alone. Cp. Appendix VII. 8 s.

5. avrov. Bresler suspected a lucum after avrov, Stein supplies re kal rd zéros exciros or similar words, execrations being generally thus extended. king when actually in the field. Cp. Thuc. 5. 66, Xen. Rep. Lac. c. xiii. Hdt. still writes as though both kings went out to battle together, notwithstanding his own statement, 5. 75 supra. This observation convicts the whole essay of anachronism.

7. προβάτοισι. The right to have an unlimited number of victims killed and to keep the skins and backs, may and to keep the skins and backs, may sometimes have been a temptation to excessive piety or procrastination (9. 61). But it might on occasion serve a strategic purpose (c. 76 infra). Cp. Xen. op. c. xiii. 2-4.

6. veounvias. On the first and on the seventh days of every month each king was supplied, at the public ex-pense, with a full-grown victim to offer to Apollo, beside a bushel of barley-meal and a quart of wine (Laconian measure). The Laconian measures were probably the same as the Aiginetan (cp. Hultsch, Metrologie², p. 500). The first and seventh of the month were sacred to Apollo. Cp. A. Mommsen, Chronologie, pp. 82 f., 90.

infra. 11. 860. Xenophon, op. c. xv. 5, describes the Pythii as tent-comrades (συσκήνους) of the kings. As Hdt. states the number of II of appointed by each king, and explains their functions, while he neither limits the πρόξεινοι nor explains their functions, we are left to conclude that the Spartan Proxeni discharged the ordinary functions of Proxeni elsewhere but differed in the method of appointment; that their number was not fixed, and that the kings combined to appoint them. The treatment of 'strangers' (cp. 9. 11) might be naturally a concern of the 'war lords' (3. 148, 5. 50). Cp. the jurisdiction of the πολέμαρχοι at Athens and of the 'Praetor' at Rome. For instances of the Spartan *poteria abroad, cp. Thuc. 5. 43, 2; 6. 89, 2, Xen. Hell. 6. 3, 4: two cases in which the *poξενία was hereditary, or quasi-hereditary, and dated from before the Persian war and dated from before the Persian war (cp. Meier, de Proxenia (1843), pp. 8 f.); two other cases, C. I. G. 1334 f. These representatives are not appointed by the kings apparently, and it is difficult to suppose that the kings had the actual appointment of the representatives of Athens, etc. in Sparta: they might, however, have had a formal congé d'élire. Monceaux, Les Proxenies Greeques (1886), pp. 9 ff. σιτεόμενοι μετά των βασιλέων τὰ δημόσια. μη έλθοῦσι δὲ τοῖσι Βασιλεύσι έπλ το δείπνον αποπέμπεσθαί σφι ές τὰ οἰκία αλφίτων τε δύο χοίνικας έκατέρω καὶ οἴνου κοτύλην, παρεούσι δὲ διπλήσια πάντα δίδοσθαι· τώυτὸ δὲ τοῦτο καὶ πρὸς ἰδιωτέων κληθέντας 15 έπὶ δείπνον τιμασθαι. τὰς δὲ μαντηίας τὰς γινομένας τούτους φυλάσσειν, συνειδέναι δέ καὶ τοὺς Πυθίους. δικάζειν δέ μούνους τους βασιλέας τοσάδε μοῦνα, πατρούχου τε παρθένου πέρι, ες τον ίκι έεται έχειν, ήν μή περ ο πατήρ αὐτήν έγγυήση, καὶ όδων δημοσιέων πέρι καὶ ήν τις θετὸν παίδα ποιέεσθαι εθέλη, 20 Βασιλέων εναντίου ποιέεσθαι. καλ παρίζειν βουλεύουσι τοίσι γέρουσι ἐοῦσι δυῶν δέουσι τριήκοντα ἡν δὲ μὴ ἔλθωσι, τοὺς μάλιστά σφι των γερόντων προσήκοντας έχειν τα των βασιλέων γέρεα, δύο ψήφους τιθεμένους, τρίτην δὲ τὴν έωυτῶν.

suggests (in the light of some late analogies) that the Proxeni nominated by the kings were extraordinary, to meet the cases of states who had no ordinary Prozenos in Sparta, Hdt. who visited Sparta (3, 55) ought to be a good authority on this point.

12. σιτεόμενοι μ. τ. β. τὰ δ. Perhaps only applied to warfare. Cp. Xenoph. op. c. xv. 4, 5.

μή ελθούσε δέ. If this passage, μη ελθούσε . δίδοσθαι (or, rather, down to τεμάσθαι), refers to the δείπνου after a θυσίη δημοτελής, it should be replaced above after the words τὰ δέρματα. Standing where it now does it must be taken to refer to the oirnous of the kings, shared by the Pythii, which should apparently have been restricted to warfare. But the Pythii may have messed with the king at the politica, Forty-eight xolvines went to the meοφινος, 144 κοτέλαι, or 12 χόες, to the μετρήτης. These are here Aiginetan or Laconian measures, presumably. In 425 n.e. at Sphakteria the blockaded Spartans were each allowed daily 2 χοθείκει of barley-meal and 2 κοτέλαι of wine, with half the quantities for their servants (Thuc. 4. 16). But those were Attic measures, and larger than Laconian. Cp. 'Αθην. πολ. c. 10 with Sandys' note, Ridgway, Origin of Correct etc. 1. 244 Currency, etc. p. 214.

17. μούνους . . μούνα. In conjunction with the Gerusia the kings would share jurisdiction in other cases (cp. Aristot. Pol. 2. 9, 25, 1270 b). This special jurisdiction apparently is connected with the Family (marriage of heiresses and adoptions). These questions might concern the kings, as heads of the highest families; as 'warlords' they were interested in the 'eura viarum.' Stein (followed by Gilbert, i. 2 50) understands the phrase paraly of cettling boundary distance. for πατρούχου would read πατρωιούχου, after Rochl, on the strength of the Gortynian inscription, which can hardly prove that Hdt, used the word. (Perhaps Hdt. wrote παμούχου=παμώχου.)

On the restriction ην μή περ ό πατηρ κτλ. cp. Aristot. Pol. 2. 9, 15, 1270°, and c. 130 infen. 21. παρίζαν. Certainly does not mean 'to preside,' The kings might be absent from the session. Whether they ever acted as chairmen, or might summon the Gerusia, does not appear.

24. 860. Thueydides in a celebrated passage (1, 20, 3) gives as an instance of popular errors the belief that each of the kings of the Lakedaimonians had two votes, not one only. It has been debated whether Thuc. is consciously referring to this passage, and urged on behalf of Hdt. that he does not say that each king had two votes. This is true; he does not: neither does he say, as Thucydides, that each king had only one vote. In short, Hdt. expresses himself obscurely, probably because his ideas were obscure upon the subject. His language here is capable of being harmonised with either the erroneous view, which Thucydides says was common, or the correct view, which Thucydides substitutes. Whether Thucydides had this particular passage of Hdt.'s work in view, or only the popular and widespread error, from which Hdt. had not emancipated himself, and to which, by his ambiguous utterance here, he may have given further circulation, depends on the previous question whether Thucydides was acquainted with the work of Herodotus or not. If he was acquainted Herodotus or not. If he was acquainted with the work of Hdt. he was probably referring to it, for it is significant that in the same passage (1. 20, 3) he corrects another supposed error which is certainly found in Hdt. 9. 53. (The 'previous question' must here be reserved, but the weight of argument and evidence is in favour of believing that Thucydides was acquainted with Hdt.'s work.)

58 Ταθτα μέν ζωσι τοίσι βασιλεθσι δέδοται έκ του κοινού των Σπαρτιητέων, ἀποθανοῦσι δὲ τάδε. ἱππέες περιαγγέλουσι τὸ γεγονὸς κατὰ πᾶσαν τὴν Λακωνικήν, κατὰ δὲ τὴν πόλιν γυναίκες περιιούσαι λέβητα κροτέουσι. ἐπεὰν ὧν τοῦτο γίνηται 5 τοιοῦτο, ἀνάγκη ἐξ οἰκίης ἐκάστης ἐλευθέρους δύο καταμιαίνεσθαι, ανδρα τε καὶ γυναϊκα· μὴ ποιήσασι δὲ τοῦτο ζημίαι μεγάλαι νόμος δὲ τοῖσι Λακεδαιμονίοισι κατὰ τῶν βασιλέων επικέαται. τούς θανάτους έστι ώυτος και τοίσι βαρβάροισι τοίσι έν τή 'Ασίη· τῶν γὰρ ὧν βαρβάρων οἱ πλεῦνες τῷ αὐτῷ νόμφ γρέωνται 10 κατά τους θανάτους των βασιλέων. ἐπεάν γάρ ἀποθάνη βασιλεύς Λακεδαιμονίων, έκ πάσης δεί Λακεδαίμονος, χωρίς Σπαρτιητέων, άριθμώ των περιοίκων άναγκαστούς ές το κήδος ίέναι.

τρίτην δὲ τὴν ἐωυτῶν. The question is whether Hdt. means that the Gerontes in question gave six votes in all, or four votes in all. 'Two for each king and then each his own': or 'two for the two kings and then thirdly (and fourthly) each his own.' The obscurity is perhaps due, at least in part, to Hdt.'s not contemplating separately the cases where one king was absent and where both kings were absent. Nor does he state whether the royal proxies gave the votes by direc-tion of the kings, as the kings would have voted, if present, or whether they were free to vote according to their own judgment. Nor does he state clearly whether each king was represented in absentia by one or more than one relative.

4. λέβητα κροτέουσι . . καταμιαίνουθαι. Such extravagant signs of mourning were not in accordance with Hellenic sentiment and practice, or at least with the higher Athenian culture (cp. Pericles' Fun. Or. Thuc. 2. 45). It was an archaic or a 'barbarous' excess. Solon was credited with having restricted it by statute at Athens (Plutarch, Sol. 12), and in Plutarch's own time and family a supreme selfcontrol was to be observed in such matters, cp. Plut. Consol. ad Uxorem (Mor. 608 ff.). According to Plutarch even Lykurgos had limited these demonstrations at Sparta: Instit. Lac. 18 (Mor. 238), Vit. Lyc. 27. Cp. further: L. Schmidt, Die Ethik der Alten Griechen, ii. p. 114 f. and especially Bekker, Charicles, Excursus to the ninth scene.

17. πολίμφ. The death of a Spartan king in warfare was a rarity, and the failure to recover his body probably unique in the case of Leonidas. Plutarch, Agis 21, gives us to understand that the divinity which hedged a Spartan king was his security from the hands of the forman: did kal mollar hands of the forman: δεδ καὶ πολλών γεγονότων Λακεδαιρούοις άγωνων πρὸς Ελληνας εἰς μώνος ἀνηρέθη πρὸ τῶν Φιλιππικῶν δώρατι πληγείς περί Λεϋκτρα Κλεόμαβροτος. Lac. oil fin. gives the reason for these honours: ούχ ώς άνθρώποις άλλ' ώς βρωσε τοίς . . βασιλείς προτετιμήκασιν. 19. ούκ ίσταται κτλ. The phraseology here is unsatisfactory. Stein explains droph as including everything that took place in the market-place, and appears as one particular case, viz. 'electoral meeting' (abstract for concrete). Kruger pointed out that of kariorara would be preferable, cp. Thue. 1. 31, 4: 3. 36, 6. Van Herwerden follows Kruger and in addition alters άρχαιρεσίη into άρχαι σέδε γεροσίη. Verily, άρχαιρεσίη συνίζει is tather strong: moreover the Apella at Sparta probably did not sit.

69. 3. Σπαρτιητίων. This liberation of debtors does not apply to the Perioiki apparently, much less to Helots, or it would be a better parallel to the remission of arrears of tribute by the Great King. The pseudo-Smerdis improved on this rule, 3, 67. At Sparts the effect would apparently be to restore the ἐπομείσκε, for the time at least, to the class of ἐμοῖοι, and so recruit the Spartiate caste at the expense of the Perioiki. Whether the king released those in debt to the public by paying their debts, or by simple proclamation, does not appear: presumably the latter. How private citizens could be in debt to the king is not clear. Plato, Alleib. i. 123, mentions a βασιλικόν φόρον, δν of debtors does not apply to the Perioiki to the king is not clear. Plato, Alkib.

i. 123, mentions a βασιλικός φόρος, δυ τέλουσιν οl Λακεδαιμόνιοι τοῦς βασιλεδοι.
This would presumably be a statepayment. Perhaps the private debts would be rent from the royal domains —in which case, however, we should expect it to be due, not from Spartiatae, but from Perionki. It is conceivable that the Spartan kings were, unlike most other kings, money-leulers; but

be more important personages than ordinary domestics. Perhaps they ordinary domestics. Perhaps they accompanied the armies in the field, ep. 9, 82. Whether they were free or servile does not clearly appear from these passages: Helotry too was hereditary. The passage may read to us almost like a jest or a parody (as if one said: 'Kingship and cookery are hereditary arts'), but it is probably authentic and serious. In every society authentic and serious. In every society to a certain extent, in non-progressive societies and in societies obviously based on conquest and slave labour to a greater extent, crafts are and remain hereditary. The difference between here-litary. The difference between Athens and Sparta, Sparta and Egypt, Egypt and India in these respects was one of degree not of kind. Some have asserted that there were 'castes' in early Greece (see Rawlinson, Herodotus, iii. 2065, n. to 5. 66), others have denied that there were eastes in Egypt (Wiedemann, Herodets Zweites Fuch, p. 573). There has probably nowhere been a system of Castes to compare with the Indian, so fully sanctioned by religion, and so firmly established by secular custom; but ancient civilisa-tions, based on war, slavery, blood, and religion, tended to stereotype classes, to give fixity to status, to limit contract, to eliminate individualism and competition. Of such societies in Greece Sparta was chief.

The above remarks and references are not intended to insimute that the story of Ariston and his beautiful wife, the mother of Demaratos, is simply a myth or fable: the matter-of-fact element is probably the fundamental one in the story, but it has been fused and transfigured in a mythical atmosphere and is not sober history. That the transfiguration was the work of Hdt. is not likely: he gives the story as he heard it, though gives the story as he heard it, though we need not suppose it to have lost in his telling. No doubt the hill was one of the strongholds of the prae-Dorian population. The hill was numed the Menclanon, and Curtius (Pelamon ii 229) compares its resistant (Pelopon. ii. 239) compares its position in regard to Sparts with the position of Janiculum in regard to Rome. The Phoibeion was on the right (west) bank of the river.

62. 12. άναγκαζόμενος. The absolute inviolability of the oath in its literal meaning was a first principle of morality in its semi-conscious or prae-philosophic days. But this respect for the letter generated violations of the spirit in two directions: (1) evasions of obligation by a technical conformity and a virtual breach of contract in a good or a bad cause. Cp. the stories of Etearchos and Themison, 4. 154, and of the Persians and Barkaeans, 4. 201; (2) observance of the oath, spite of all consequences foreseen and unforeseen, as in the story of Ariston and Agetos in the story of Ariston and Agetos found themselves in presence of a conflict of duties or obligations, which stimulated casuistry; such casuistry the Hippolytos of Euripides, perplexed between his filial duty and the obligation of his oath of secrecy, formulates in the much misunderstood line (Hippol. 612) ἡ γλῶσσ' ὁμώμοχ' ἡ δὲ φρην ἀνώμοντος, which earned for Euripides satire and censure, albeit Hippolytos in the play put away the temptation and concluded to abide by his oath: 657 f.

In later times the philosophers showed themselves of the same mind as Hippolytos: Quod enim its iuratum est ut mens conciperet fieri oportere id servandum est: quod aliter, id si non feceris, nullum periurium (Cicero, de Off. 3. 29, § 107). The difficulty arose, as L. Schmidt points out (Ethik der All. Griechen, 2. 8), partly from the failure of the pre-philosophic Greeks to distinguish between the obligation to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth on oath (δληθορκεῖν ψευδορκεῖν), and the obligation to act in a certain way after a promise ratified by an oath (εὐορκεῖν ἐπιορκεῖν). See further the story of Glaukos, c. 86 infra.

έν θέκφ κατημένφ μετά τῶν ἐφόρων. Pausan. 3. 7, 7 telling this same anecdote says that Ariston was sitting with the Ephors ἐν βουλŷ. may be doubted whether the King and Ephors alone constituted a meeting.) The Ephers hear the king's unfortunate remark, but although it is one of their special duties to maintain and guard the stock of Herakles in Sparta (cp. 5. 30), and although all Sparta has been praying that Ariston may have a son to succeed him (see just below), they take no notice of the remark at the time. Credat Judarus!

6. ἐπὶ δακτύλων. Ariston, who appears, like a savage, to have had his arithmetic 'at his fingers' ends,' may perhaps have become confused, as per-sons are apt to be who have a difficulty in counting ten. This fingering is a touch of a kind much emphasised in some quarters as evidence of the truth and authenticity of a narrative. Cp. 4. 98 supra. It is undoubtedly both humorous and artistic, but is it history? Anyway, it is not calculated to raise our opinion of the king's education. The count was complicated by his having to allow for the difference between calendar and lunar months: or perhaps his doubt arose from his not (at first) making the allowance. 11. Tobe. The desire of the Sportans, that Ariston should have a son, did not arise from there being otherwise no legitimate successor, as the sequel proves that there was another branch of the lesser house in Sparta, which was thus more fortunately circumstanced than the elder house (5, 39 supra). An aut of the Apella seems involved (warδημεί Σπαρτιήται . . άρην έποιήσαντο).

To what cause the extraordinary fame and popularity of Ariston were due does not clearly appear. The victory over Tegea belonged to the early years of his reign, and his reign seems to have lasted about half-a-century (Clinton, Fast. Hell. ii. p. 258). Demaratos was king at the time of the expulsion of the Peisistratidae (5, 75 supra, and seems to have made a slip somewhere, as in 8, 131, where the complete genealogy of Leotychides is given, not an Agis but an Agesilaes appears as the father of Menarcs. It is character-istic of our author to leave such inconsistencies standing (cp. Introduction, p. lxxiii.). Leotychides had to go back to Theopompos to find a scaptred ancestor, seven names separating the two. Only six names intervene between Theopompos and Demaratos. The reigns were longer than the generations. The same phenomenon recurs in the succession of Archidamos to Leotychides, a generation (Zeuxidamos) dropping out between. Cp. c. 71 injra.

6. τότε, c. 51 supra.
To these two grounds of complaint of Kleomenes against Demaratos must almost certainly be added a third, arising out of the conduct of Demarates in and after the Argive war (see c. 82 infro), which was much more recent.

Were the five ex-Ephors, who had been in office half-a-century who had been in once half-a-century before, produced as evidence of a remark of which they had node nothing at the time! And what would now be the ages of these Ephors! The youngest would have been at least eighty. No wonder Lectychides did not succeed in convincing the court (dnépaux imperfect).

67. 3. peré. How long after is not stated. It, as is probable, the Spartan eivil year began in the antumn (ep. Thue, 5. 36 for the year 421 n.c.), and if magistrales entered office at the beginning of the year, the insult to Demarates could not be dated before the midsummer (July) 490 n.c. His deposition may have taken place in the summer of 491 n.c. and his election to an office, not specified, may have taken place before the beginning of the new year. 13. παρά τῆσι. Demerates and his mother were standing by the altar of Zeus Herkeios, just inside the gates of the courtyard. The stables and storehouses were probably hard by, with the chapel of Astrobakos, the patron of the Muleteers. Pausanias 3. 16, 6 (249) tells us all we know on the subject. It is evident that at some time the Agidae found room for Astrobakos (or Astrabakos) among their annestors, for the story goes that Astrabakos and Alopekos, brothers in the fourth generation from Agis, found the ξόπου of Artenis Orthia, which was worshipped at Lakedaimon by human sacrifices till Lykurgos substituted dlogging for death. This was evidence to Pausanias that the ξόανον in Limnatis was the true ξόανον brought by Orestes and Iphigeneia from Taurike. Cp. 4. 1021 supra. Astrabakes and Alopekes went out of their minds (παρεψρόνησαν) over the discovery. (Cp. 5. 85 supra.) The mythologists associate Alopekes with the fex, and Astrabakes with the sumpter-nule (ἀστράβη), associations which might suggest that these heroes were prehably not models of purity. Wide (Lukmische Kulle, p. 279) follows Benseler in explaining the name as= "One riding on a mule-saddle," and emphasises the resemblance between Astrabakes and Dionysos.

 μετὰ δέ. The flight of Demarates from Sparta sooms to fall in the summer from Sparta seems to fall in the summer of 490 R.C. (or possibly in the year previous). The date of his arrival in Asia, of his reception by Darcios, is unfortunately obscure. From 7. 3 it might be argued that Demarates presented himself in Susa after Marathon, and after the revolt of Egypt, but before the death of Darcios, say about 486 R.C. Ktesias seems to place his advent very shortly before the passage of the Hellespont (Gilmore, p. 155): if this indication were trustworthy it might be taken to refer simply to the moment (in 480 R.C.) when Demaratos moment (in 480 s.c.) when Demoratos thay have come from Pergamos to join Xerxes at Abylos. But see next note. 10. γην τε και πόλιας: Πέργαμον μὲν

The Troud was an alternative to Lakoura. for if Xerxes had been victorious, presunably Demaratos would have returned to Sparta as 'Tyrant' of Lakedaimon, perhaps as Satrap of Peloponnese or of Hellas. Cp. the dream of Pausanias, 5. 32 supra. The Prokles Pausanns, 5. 32 supra. The Prokles above-mentioned took part in the expedition of Kyros the younger and is described by Xenophon, Anab. 2. 1. 3 Προκλής ὁ Τενθρανίας άρχων, γεγονώς απο Δημαράτου τοῦ Λάκωνος: and in 7. 8, 17 as Προκλής ὁς Αλισάρνης και Τενθρανίας ω άπὸ Δημαράτου. Pythias, the daughter of Aristotle, was married to a Problein this same family (the second of her three husbands) and had two sons by him. Prokles and Demarates, who became papils of Theophrastes. (Sext. Emp. πρ. μαθηματικούs 258, Bekker, ed. 1842, p. 657). It is an obvious hypothesis that Hdt.'s angelotes of the province of t Demaratos may in part be drawn from the family traditions at Pergamos.

12. ἀπολαμπρυνθείς. Hitherto he has appeared in Hdt.'s narrative in an un-But in earlie he appears to serve his country better. Cp. 7, 239 et al.

Hdt. becomes obscure over the exploits of Demaratos. Does he mean to say that Demarates was the only king of Sparta who ever won a chariot race at Olympia? Or does he mean to say that he was the only king who having won such a victory had it proclaimed in the name of the Lakedaimonians, not in his own? (Cp. c. 103 infro, and Thuc. 5. 50.) There seems no possibility of dating exactly the victory of Demaratos ("zwischen 510 n. 491," H. Forster, Die Olympischen Sieger, p. 11, or rather 508-492 n.c. = 01. 03-721. The event may have been commemorated on an inscription. Cp. Introduction, pp. lviii ff. and lxxxii. The grammar of the passage is not strict, alla re duoλαμπρινθείς και προσέβαλε is incon-sequent, and the duplication of τε και (έργοισί τε και γνώμησι) is clumsy. άλλα τε άπολ. και τούτο . ποιόπας, Όλιμπαίδα . προτέβαλε would be more correct. The grammatical inconsequence is, however, Heroclotean, ep. 1. 74 infra προτάχων και ήν. So 1. So έπωρραζομενος και έπεπομορες, 3. 74 αύτοι τον φόμενοι . . κείνον δ΄ έκξετον.

the sceptre: what of the supposed law, put into the mouth of Demaratos, 7, 6.
6. Meviov. Nothing is recorded of Menius and Diakterides, brother and

cp. 7, 229,
From the passage it may be inferred that Archidamos was still alive when Hdt. wrote it. Leotychides died in 469 a.c., see next.c. Archidamos died in 428 a.c. (Thue. 2. 1, 89). It died in 428 h.c. (Thuc. 3. 1, 59). It is quite obvious that Zeuxidamos must have been born before Leotychides became king in 491/0 h.c., for Archidamos who succeeded in 469 h.c. (Duncker, viii. 131) was probably born about 499 h.c. Leotychides who may have been barn about 550 h.c., and was perhaps sixty years of age when he succeeded Demarates in 400 n.c., had a long life, and might well survive his son.

8. 66vros. It was not a runaway match as Demaratos' marriage had been c. 65 supra, but as it is hardly possible to suppose that the wedding of Archidamos and Lampito took place before 460 u.c., much less before 475 B.C., the act here reterred to must have been a Betrothal, not an Esponsal: the formula rather suggests the latter, cp.

Duncker, viii. 62, dates it two years later 476 B.C., the year (= 477/6 B.C.) that witnessed the separate organisation of the maritime Allies, and the victory of Eion (7. 107, Thuc. 1. 98), and connects it with the efforts made by Sparta to retain or recover her prestige and position by working in the area of the Amphiktyonic League against the 'Medizers' (cp. 7. 213). The return of Leotychides, his trial and exile, Duncker dates spring 475 B.C. Busolt, Gr. G. ii. 353, agrees with Duncker's date. (In 'Aθ. πολ. c. 23 the formation of the League is dated to the year of Timosthenes, 478/7 B.C., perhaps a slight prochronism.)

6. ond Skaartpoov imagels. Cp. Introduction, p. lxxxvi. Doubtless Hdt. had heard in Sparta the more or less official account of the judicial condemnation of Leotychides; but was the story the truth, or the whole truth? It may fairly be doubted, both in the light of the story itself, and in the light of other similar stories, perhaps not less but more improbable. So much of Spartan history, especially of Sparta's internal history, is made up of the dishonour of her kings! Duncker has pointed out more fully and clearly than any one else the suspicions attaching to the stories of the end of Kleomenes, Leotychides, Pausanias, the great and ambitious kings of the fifth century, who aimed perhaps at ruling instead of merely reigning. A powerful king was more dangerous to the Dorian oligarchy than a weak king, and success in foreign warfare was best calculated to enhance a king's power. If Leotychides had really 'conquered Thessaly' he might have been more formidable to Sparta than as victor of Mykale, especially with the other king a minor, and his guardian abroad. Leotychides was already (in 476 B.C.) a greybeard: but ambition and masterfulness no more than avarice decrease with years. The charge of corruption may have been justified, but Leotychides may still have been sacrificed as a dangerous politician. Hdt. does not go behind what he has been told: still less does he suspect any foul play in the death of Leotychides. It probably coincided with the confederation of Arkadia against Sparta, cp. 9. 35, and it was surely no accident that Tegea was the refuge of the Spartan exile (cp. c. 74 infra). The Persian war strained the constitution of Sparta almost to bursting and collapse. Success and failure were alike fatal. Foreign com-Success and mands were dangerous, not so much to the integrity of the individual Spartan, as to the conditions of the oligarchic régime at home. Leoty-chides and Pausanias, the victor of Mykale, the victor of Plataea, were too great for an oligarchic state: they went the way of Kleomenes. Spartan traditions never betrayed the Spartan government; a king is always at hand as a scape-goat (cp. 5. 49-51). If Leotychides really succumbed to a bribe, Themistokles and Athenian interests may have had something to say thereto. Duncker assigns the proposal of Themistokles to destroy the Peloponnesian fleet at Pagasae to the winter 476/5 B.C. vol. viii. pp. 65 ff. Busolt, ii. 354 n., virtually endorses his combination. (One might be tempted to put it in 479 s.c., as the Peloponnesians came back from the Hellespont, cp. Thuc. 1. 89-93.)

The Aiginetans at least regarded it as a hostile demonstration (is airois) and yielded to a jover majeure. That the kings of Sparta should be sent by the government to hand over ten of the principal men of the Dorian oligarchy to Athens, a democracy, seems to show that the Spartaus were by this time fully alive to the danger of a Persian invasion, the restoration of 'tyrannies' under Persian auspices, perhaps the establishment of the tyranny in Sparta itself, the revival of Argos, the reappearance of the Phoenician in Thera and Kythera. Had not Sparta, if the story in 7, 133 be true, already thrown the Persian heralds into the Kuiadas! The action of Koninth at this juncture is not recorded at Sparta, nor at Athens: but it is safe to con-jecture that Korinth at this crisis was with them, op. c. 89 infra.

own hand under the most horrible circumstances. Every one accepted the Spartan account of the facts, which was necessarily an official account, and the only one available. But it was generally felt that some signal explanation was necessary of the king's fate. There are on record five rival hypotheses in explanation of the king's end : the pan-Hellenic (Delphian), the Athenian, the Argive, the Spartan, the author's own. Some of the conjectures betrayed local prejudices (as the Athenian, the Argive), though the majority of the Hellenes agreed that the unpardonable sin of Kleomenes was his corruption of the pan-Hellenic centre of inspiration. Hdt., however, prefers a more exact and personal illustration of the lextalionis. Cp. c. 81 infra. Oddly enough, the Spartans took a purely natural view of cause and effect in this instance, c. 84 infra. Hith has left it to Pausanias 3, 4, 6 to point out that the five hypotheses are all reconcilable; though the modern will be tempted to add that this harmony is far from proving the truth of any.

The Argives may have assigned this cause for the doom of Kleomenes, but the story of the outrage which follows is not derived from Argive sources, and it is fair to remark that the assignment of these reasons to the Argives, the Athenians and "the majority of Hellenes," might be a fair result of inference on Hdt.'s part to the probabilities, or proprieties, of the case. Cp. Introduction, pp. lxxviii f. 76. 2. craft. The war between Sparta and Argos here narrated is unfortunately not dated by Hdt., who treats it merely not dated by Irdi., who treats it marely as an episode in the biography of Kleomenes. Pausanias 3. 4, 1 places it immediately after the accession of Kleomenes (and Manso, Sparta, 1. i. 203, ii. 329, actually dated it to 519 kee. So too even Curtius, Gr. 9. iii. 5 p. 889 and reff.).

It has been placed by others later, but still before the close of the sixth century ; about 510 p.c. (Smith, Diet. Biegr. s. v. CLEOMENES) or 506 B.C., i.c. between the retreat from Eleusis and the application of Aristagoras in Sparta.

The formal and material arguments against the earlier and in favour of a against the earner and in lavour of a later date, are numerous and strong: (1) The oracle associates the Argive war with the Ionian revolt and the capture of Miletos. This is a prima force proof that the events were nearly synchronous, quite independent of the question whether the double-barrelled Pythian shot was a genuine prophecy. It is enough that before Hdt.'s time the capture of Miletos in 494 n.c. and the Argive war of Kleomenes were associated together at Delphi. Cp. c. 19 supra. (2) C. 500 p.c. Aristagoras urges the Spartan king μάχας άναβάλ-λεσθαι πρός τε Μεσσηνίους εύντας ίσοmaléas sal'Apadoas re sal'Appelous 5, 49 supra, which would have been rather heside the mark if the king had just put Argos hors de cambat by a orushing defeat. (3) An impending war with defeat. (3) An impending war with Argos explains much better than a recent victory the refusal of the Spartans in 490 n.c. to assist the Ionians. Cp. the exactly parallel case half-a-century earlier, 1. 81 ff. 152. much better with what is recorded of the words and deeds of the Argives in 481 n.c. (7, 148, 149), where they excuse their neutrality on the ground of their recent loss in the war with Kleomenes. (5) Sikyon and Aigina appear as allies of Sparta. Aigina joined 516 B.c., Sikyon in 506 μ.c. (Duncker, l. c. infra as against Pausanias). Cp. Grote, iv. p. 10 n.; Duncker, vii. 5 p. 72; Buselt, ii. 48. Cp. Clinton, ii. 3 517 note x, who does not date the war "about 510 a.c." as erroneously said (Smith, Diet. Σπαρτιήταs. The Spartan tradition completely ignores assistance or allies; but c. 92 infra shows that Aigina and Sikyon at bast took part in it, even if the συμμάχων στρατιά in Pausan. 3. 4, 1 is an error (Buselt, ii. (5) Sikyon and Aigina appear as allies

Pausan. 3. 4, 1 is an error (Busolt, ii. 40 n. 3). Anyway, it is hardly to be supposed that this war was undertaken on the sole initiative of the king, or kings (c. 56 supra). The Delphic direction would weigh more with the Spartans generally (cp. 5. 63) than with Kleemenes, who knew how to procure such things. The strategy may have been of Kleomenes, the policy was Sparta's.

3. Afyeras, ep. c. 74 supra. Hdt. does not write as though he had been in Argos: his doubt, however, might be on the connexion of the river with the lake. The Stymphälis Limne is in N.E. Atkadia, under Mt. Kyllene, and A.B. Afracia, under Mt. Kylene, and empties through a katavothra or sub-terranean channel: the drainage there is to the Gulf of Corinth. The river Erasinos issues from Mt. Chaon and flows into the Gulf of Argos, S.W. of the city. The distance between the two points may be some 25 or 30 miles two points may be some 25 or 30 miles. E. as the crow flies, but not as the water flows. Diederus 15, 49 gives it as 200 stades (= c. 26 miles), and Riwlinson note ad l. says this is 25 miles short. It seems ditheult to believe that the waters of the Erasinos really flow out of the lake of Stymphales, and it is noticeable that Hdt. by no means commits himself to that by no means commits himself to that theory, generally prevalent in ancient and modern times. The Arkadian water with almost this single exception finds its way westwards. Cp. Bursian, Geogr. v. Gr. ii. 186.

7. αύτῷ, the river god. His daughters, Anton. Lib. 40 ("sonst unbekannt," Schultz apud Roscher, Lexilon, sub v.), would be waternymphs, like the Danaids. The sacrifice was, perhaps, something less than a bull. Cp. c. 56 supra.

Iκαλλιέρει. The διαβατήρια were unfavourable—as when Pausanias did not choose to cross Asopes, 9, 36. That there were other reasons for the strategic action in each case is more than probable. If when Kleomene reached the Erasinos there were from six to eight thousand Argive hophite on the opposite bank, the 'citizens' who were 'saved by the Erasinos' were not all Argives. But ep. note infea. 8. Κφη. Kleomenes had a Laconic tongue. Cp. 5. 72, c. 50 supera. Plutarch, Apophth. Lac. (Moralia, 22% f.) and Appendix VII. § 7.

Nauplin, Tiryus, and Sopoia or Hesepeia to the S.E. The lottoms used on this occasion to cross the gulf of Argos were supplied in part from Sikyon and Aigina, c. 92 infra. They must have been summoned in good time, even if the galleys from Sikyon were run across the isthmos (cp. Thue. 3. 15, 8, 7. 8). It looks as if we had in this passage an imperfect and distorted tradition of a brilliant strategic combination, projected and carried out by Kleomenes, the demonstration on the Erasinos being a feint to draw the Argives from the city. It

6. thoβforro. The Argives were not afraid of a pitched battle with the Spartans, they were afraid of a ruse, because the oracle had warned them that "when the female prevailed over that when the lemma prevaled over the male, driving him out and getting glory of Argives, women in Argos would defice themselves, and posterity would have to say: 'dread wreathed serpent perished by spear o'ercome.'

7. lenkova. The maps the server of th

9. d\lambda in fact there have been many genuine prophecies less obscure. It does not, however, follow that "it is hopeless to attempt a rational explanation of this oracle": on the contrary, rational explanations are not for to seek.

A. Favourable to Argos. She of Argos shall defeat and drive out him of Lakedaimon, but it will cost the Argive women dear: 'twill be a Kadmean victory: posterity will account that day the ruin of Argive power. The only doubt that could arise would be: who was the female of Argos: but the goddess (Hera) supplies the answer.

B. Unfavourable to Argos. Sparta (female) shall conquer Argos (male), (but see infra). The women of Argos shall see infra). The women of Argos shall make lumentation. Posterity will date the ruin of Argos from that day. The only obscurity left in this case lies in the word &&\delta_{\text{od}}\day. In neither case is teasy to see how the oracle should rouse a suspecion of a ruse or trick, though a trick was certainly perpetrated on the Argives.

Taking either of these interpretations the oracle would be a remarkable pre-diction, and substantially consenant with the event. The first interpretation, however, promises victory of a kind to Argos for which there is no room or justification in the narrative of Hdt., unless indeed the first lines be applied to the expulsion of Kleomenes by Hera (c. 82 infra), and form a sort of δστερον πρώτερον. The second interpretation leaves nothing to be desired but an explanation of exchang, and even this might be found by referring h villeta to Hera, and quoting c. 82 infra, as above. The authenticity and genuinely prophetic character of the response will then stand and fall with the credibility of the events narrated in c. 82 infra.

obscurity whatever. This explanation, however, involves the conclusion that for the truth, the whole truth, we for the truth, the whole truth, we must look elsewhere than to the story of the Argive war as told by Hdt. In this explanation the female of Argos becomes Telesilla the poetess, who, according to another tradition, with the women of Argos succeeded in driving Kleomenes out of the town, after he had defeated the men of Argos in a pitched battle. This story is indeed "incompatible with the trate." in a pitched battle. This story is indeed "incompatible with the statements of Herodotos," but it does not follow that Grote is right in concluding that "the story probably grew up out of the oracle itself." It is possible that the oracle grew up out of the story, and that the story was substantially. story, and that the story was substantially true. So Clinton, Fast. Hell. ii. 2 p. 21, 510 B.C., after quoting the authorities for the exploit of Telesilla (Plutarch, Virt. Mul. p. 245 D E, Pausanias 2. 20, 8), adds: "Herodotus confirms the fact by recording the oracle to which it gave occasion." The oracle is plainly a vaticinium post eventum in Clinton's opinion. That the traditions in Pausanias and Plutarch are from an Argive source (Sokrates of Argos), while the story in Hdt. is in the main Spartan, is a further suggestion of Duncker's, which helps to ex-plain the discrepancies. The fact that Sokrates was a late author does not make it improbable that traditions preserved through him are primitive or early: every one now sees that we are largely indebted to the latest authors (Strabo, Pausanias, Plutarch et al.) for our knowledge of primitive and early traditions, legends, myths, customs, and historic facts.

D. Two other interpretations suggest themselves as explaining the origin of the response—either of which gives a much clearer sense and application: (a) Assuming that $\dot{\eta}$ $\theta\dot{\eta}\lambda\epsilon\iota a$ means Hera, and so Argos, the verses might refer to war between Argos and Epidauros, with which place the serpent was early associated. Asklepios, if not himself actually a serpent, might be represented by a serpent. Cp. Head, Hist. Num. 360, Mähly, Die Schlange im Mythus etc., p. 8. (b) Finally, it may be asked whether this oracle had originally anything to say to Argos and Hera, much less to Kleomenes or Telesilla, at all ! The boys was notoriously associated with The oois was notoriously associated with Athene (4. 189 supra, cp. 8. 41, 55), and the victory of the female over the male was her victory (Erechtheus, Erichthonios = Poseidon on the one side, and the squs or spakew on the other). The transfer of this old enigms to Argos may have been facilitated by the Homeric use of the word 'Appelos. It is not unlikely that the Delphic versifiers had a stock of such ready-made riddles on hand.

13. δεινός, though found in Hdt. coupled with σοφός, in epic or oracular language must be taken in its older meaning 'dread.' öфus. Stein interprets as the crest or symbol of Argos, the enchorial hero ('Apyeuphyrns = opioarrores). Cp. Soph. Ant. 125, Eurip. Phoen. 1137. As Busolt remarks (Gr. G. i.² 214 n.) the proper crest of the city of Argos was the wolf, or wolf's head (cp. Head, Hist. Num. p. 366); but that would hardly be a reason against interpreting the sous here to stand for Argos. And it may be added that Sepeia, or Hesepeia, is another point of suggestion between the oracle and the event $(\sigma \eta \psi = \delta \phi \iota s)$. a $\lambda \iota \iota \iota \tau \circ s$ (4 intensive), the better read-

vulgate τριέλικτος.

4. ταῦτα. According to another account, which well illustrates the cashistry of swearing, Kleomenes fooled the Argives by a device more discreditable to him than to them. Having agreed to a truce for seven days he attacked them on the third night (Plutarch, Apophth. Lac. Kleom. = Mor. 223). Being repreached for a breach of faith he replied that the nights had not been included in the oath: Δλλως τε και δ τι Δν κακόν τις ποιή τούς πολε-μίους τούτο και παρά θεοίς και παρά άνθρώποις δίκης υπέρτερον νομίζεσθαι - a sophistication which cuts at the root of all truces. See further, 1. 201 supra. The two stories are not strictly incompatible, but either is enough to explain the event; and the Herodotean looks rather like a Spartan version devised to disguise the king's breach of faith.

79. 1. airopólous áropas suggests that treachery too was at work. They could hardly have furnished him with the names of all the six thousand, or even the majority (πολλφ δέ τι πλεύται), but they might have given fifty names. The herald, a sacred personage, was not necessarily privy to the deceit: unless he was sent in to call each one separately.

The sudden conversion of this impious madman, who knew that oracles could be purchased, and afterwards bought one (c. 66 supra), had just forsworn himself, had lied through the secred lips of the herald, had committed sacrilege at Athens (5. 72 supra), at Eleusis (c. 75 supra), and presently recommits it in the Heraion (e. 82 infra), who was indeed consciously committing one at this moment in bring a sacred grove, to a conviction of the fulfilment of prophecy, and a shaping of his conduct thereto, would be more credible

if (1) there did not exist, outside Herodotus, a tradition of the Spartan king's conduct on this occasion, more consonant with probability, and (2) if there were not forthcoming an obvious explanation of the silence of Hdt. and of the origin of the Herodotean story. td6cpcvs. The king, even in the days of Kleomenes, is admittedly responsible

(ὑπεύθυνος) for the military conduct of affairs in the field: yet we are asked to believe that the Spartan king could still at this time decide questions of peace and war (c. 56 supra), i.e. of policy. It is, however, very doubtful whether the Ephors alone constituted the court which was more published. the court, which was more probably composed of the Gerusia, Ephors, and perhaps the other king. Cp. Pausanias 3. 5, 2 (à propos his namesake, anno 403 B.C.) βασιλεί δὲ τῷ Λακεδαιμονίων δικαστήρον ἐκάθιζον οι τε ὁνομαζόμενα γέροντες ὁκτὰ και είκοσιν ὅντες ἀριθμέν, καὶ ἡ τῶν ἐφόρων ἀρχή, σὺν δὲ αὐτοῖς καὶ ὁ τῆς οἰκίας βασιλεύς τῆς ἐτέρας. δωροδοκήσαντα. δωροδοκία was the convenient hypothesis to explain all miscarriages of arms or of justice (cp. c. 72 supra); but judging by Kleomenes' other acts he was capable of taking the gifts and Argos too.

3. concreus. From a military point of view the criticism seems just. At least there was nothing earthly to excuse Kleomenes for omitting to make πειράν της πόλιος, πρίν γε δη ίροισι χρήσηται και μάθη είτε οί ό θεός παραδιδοί είτε έμποδων έστηκε καλλιερευμένω δε έν τώ Πραίω έκ του αγάλματος των στηθέων φλόγα πυρός έκλάμψαι, μαθείν δὲ αὐτὸς οὕτω τὴν ἀτρεκείην, ὅτι οὐκ αίρέει τὸ ᾿Αργος. εί 10 μέν γάρ έκ της κεφαλής του άγάλματος έξέλαμψε, αίρέειν αν κατ άκρης την πόλιν, έκ των στηθέων δε λάμψαντος πων οί πεποιησθαι όσον ο θεος έβούλετο γενέσθαι. ταῦτα λέγων πιστά τε καὶ οἰκότα εδόκεε Σπαρτιήτησι λέγειν, καὶ διέφυγε πολλον τοὺς διώκουτας. 15 an attempt on the city, in the events as reported to Herodotus.

13. δ θεός. η θεός might have been expected, but op. c. 27 supra. The δγαλμα which Kleomenes saw was perhaps the dyalua Hear appaior ext alovor which Pausanias afterwards saw (2, 17, 5), and which apparently saw (2.17, 5), and which apparently survived the conflagration of 423 ε.υ.

14. διέρυγε. From the emphasis which Hdt. lays on the statement it may be inferred that Kleomenes on his return from the Argivo campaign was really brought to trial by Demaratos, or others, for failing to capture the city, and that the story of the portent in the Heraion was one of the pleas set up in defence, and helped to proset up in defence, and helped to pro-cure, or to excuse, his acquittal. It may also be conjectured that the oracles above given (cc. 76, 77) did duty upon this occusion, and may even have been procured by Kleomenes for the very purpose, perhaps through his friends, the acropola dropes, perhaps direct from Delphi. Hera had driven Kleomenes out by the flames of fire from her breast, but still he had wen a great victory, the fame of which a great victory, the fame of which would be on the lips of posterity, for valour, not for guile.

In the story of the Argive campaign we have, therefore, a more or less official account of the affiir, and an explanation, satisfactory to the Spartan government and folk (πωτά τε και οίκοτα), of the failure to capture Argos after a victory in the field. Those who cannot share the Spartan view of the verisimilitude of the defence of Kleomones, should be driven to the hypothesis of δωροδοκία, if there were no other alter-mative forthcoming. The Argive tradi-tion supplies one, according to which Kleometes, as was to be expected, after his victory advanced against the city, but was repulsed by the valour of the

Argive women headed by Telesilla. That this account in its turn contains exaggerations, is very likely: the question however is whether it does not contain some matter of fast, ignored conveniently in the story told at Sparta. Women have taken part in military operations, especially defensive and siege operations, or street-fighting (op. Thuc. 3. 74), and it was on a similar occasion in Argos that Pyrrhos received a fatal blow at a woman's hand, Plutarch, Parch. 34. That Demarates Plutarch, Purch. 34. That Demarates played a part in the Argive war, entered the town, and was obliged to retire, is also a point in the tradition which cannot be dismissed as improbable (Plutarch, Virt. Mal. 1). It would have been a fresh ground of enmity between the kings, especially if Demarates had reason to suspect that Kleomenes lead deliberately left him in the lurch. The presence of Bemaratos would be difficult to reconcile with the law recorded 5. 75 supra, and there duted c. 508 n.c. if the Argive war is correctly dated to 495/4 B.c. or to any year after the flasco at Eleusis. But it is more than reasonable to suppose that the law is incorrectly dated, and that it was really persed, if ever formally passed, on this later occasion, which should be inserted in the recital, c. 61 supra, ad fin. Cp. Appendix VII. § 10. That the Argive tradition is simply a product of Argive vanity in later times, as Manso suggests (Sparta, t. ii. pp. 292 ff.), moved thereto by the silence of Herodotus, is a conclusion based on an imperfect appreciation of the sources and methods of our author. Manso, indeed, argued that Telesilla and the women had the will to defend the city, but were not called upon to act, because a bribe did their business. That the action of the women was exaggerated, that it was put afterwards into an artificial relation to the ancient festival of the Hybristika (Platarch, Mor. 245), that there were still men left to defend the town—all that is likely enough. What is more improbable is that the Spartans after a great victory, and after an expectation of the total destruction of Argos, should have turned back without attempting the town. The matter is fully discussed by Duncker, vii. 72 ff., and his suggestions virtually accepted by Busolt, ii. 48 ff. It should be remembered that Clinton, Fasti, ad an. 510 B.C., and Thirlwall, Hist. ii. 291 ff., accept the (Argive) traditions as substantially true. On the actual losses of the Argives see next chapter.

83. 1. & Vope (cp. 4. 1 supra). Elsewhere incidentally Hdt. gives the exact number as 6000 (7. 148), Pausanias (3. 4, 1) as under 5000. The later Argive tradition gave 7777, a number the absurdity but not the origin of which was perceived by Plutarch (Virt. Mul. 4 = Mor. 245). The last number may have been derived from sacral sources, in connexion with the 'Hybristika,' which was brought into artificial relation to the exploit of the Argive women against the Spartans, and to the same ultimate source (in Semitio ritual) may be due the number seven in the truce of Kleomenes and the Argives, and in the day of the month ("the seventh," Aristot. Pol. 8. 3, 7, 1303a, Plutarch, l. c.), on which the battle was fought, according to tradition. So Duncker. The most modest estimate is probably have survived a loss of even 6000 hoplites. Accurate estimates of the Argive citizens are for a later period. Cp. Beloch, Die Bevölkerung der Gr.-Röm. Well, pp. 116 ff., Clinton, Fasti, ii. p. 517.

of Soulce. This remarkable but brief notice of the Servile Interregnum at Argos can hardly be other than an exaggeration and misconception of the relations between (Dorian) Argos and the Perioiki (Orneatae, 8. 73) brought about by the great disaster on the seventh, and the consequent changes in the political constitution of changes in the political constitution of the state (cp. Plutarch, Mor. 245). Tiryns (and Mykenae) may, perhaps, be regarded, by this time, as strong-holds of the non-Dorian elements in Argolis. (Busolt, Gr. G. i.² 213, appears to regard them as "originally" under Dorian dynasties, Tiryns how-ever soon becoming dependent on Argoe, Mykenae not so.) The victory Argos, Mykenae not so.) The victory of kleomenes had benefited these places directly or indirectly: they recovered independence. Though Argos was neutral in the Persian wars, Mykenae and Tiryns sent hoplites to Plataia, 9. 28, and their names were inscribed on the τρικάρηνος δφις, 9. 81. Cp. Hicks, Manual, No. 12, Dittenberger, Sylloge, No. 1. But Argos was nursing her strength during her long neutrality: in the war which ensued, though Argos may have had hard work ($\mu \delta \gamma_1 s$), yet Mykenae and Tiryns were practically annihilated (c. 468 B.C. Duncker, viii. 123 n., 136. Busolt, ii.-371, 376 n., 377, 440. 440, separates, with great probability, the reduction of Tiryns from the reduction of Mykense, dating the latter c. 465 B.C.) The defeat in 494 B.C. may also have left its mark upon the inner constitution of Argos, and the 'servile régime' may betoken not merely the emancipation of the Perioiki (Aristot. 8. 3, 7, 1303 a), but the enfranchisement of a goodly number in Argos itself, with the inevitable result of a development of democracy, which remained practically a permanent characteristic of Argos, whatever its relations to other centres in Argolis. Thus the victory of Sparta 494 B.C. was in the long run fatal to Spartan, to Dorian, to oligarchic interests in Argos, and Argos becomes thereafter a focus for the democratic propaganda and a centre for anti-Spartan intrigues in the Peloponnesos, the clearest, but by no means the only, glimpse of which we obtain, for a much later period, in Thuc. 5. 27 ff. Cp. Busolt, Forschungen (1880), pp. 75 ft. For πάντα τὰ πρήγματα ep. Thuc. 2. 65, 4.

7. Φιγαλεύς. Of Phigaleia, on the S.W. of Arkadia, close to the borders of Messenia: a town renowned for the cult of the horse-headed Demeter, which drew Pausanias to visit the place (8. 42, 5), whither modern travellers are likely to be attracted by the beautiful ruins of the temple of Apollo Epikurios (at Bassae), the frieze of which may be seen in the British Museum. This Arkadian diviner is one of a class of adventurers, other specimens of which are seen in Tisamenos of Elis 9. 32, Hegesistratos 9. 37; Antichares of Eleon 5. 43; Kallias 5. 44. Whether his mission in Argolis had a political purpose, and was sanctioned by Sparta, there is hardly evidence to show.

84. 1. Appelot . . dags. All that the Argives need be supposed to have the Argives need be supposed to have said is that the doom of Kleomenes was a punishment for the sacrilege against the hero Argos and his sanctuary, c. 75 supra. The story of the war (cc. 76-82) is not from Argive tradition. Whether Hdt, had even the Argive meral from an Argive source may be doubted: the Argive view of the case might be easily inferred. Cp. c. 75 supra, and Introduction, pp. kxxviii f. 2. abrol 58 Emapropral cars. The Spartans themselves saw nothing supernatural in the mania of Kleomenes; the

4. Exôdas. This magnificent programme of a joint attack by civilised and uncivilised Europe upon the Asiatic despot surpassed even the combinations of an Aristagoras, ep. 5. 49 supra. The Scythian embassy appears to be dated soon after the retreat of Darcios. How little the Scyths could have known of Sparta, or of the state of Hellenic affairs, to appear in Sparta with such proposals! But that any such embassy tasks above that any such embassy tasks and the state of the stat took place, or that any such proposal was made, is an hypothesis hardly re-quiring discussion, albeit the idea of a raid on upper Asia is more appropriately fixed on Scythian nomads than upon the astute Milesian. Scyths may have been seen from time to time in Sparta (cp. 4. 77 supra), yet the practice of hard drinking, and the synonym therefor, might have found their way to Spirts without a Seythian embassy. If Kleomenes had been an incurable drunkard for twenty years or so before his end, his great plaus and achievements, his fame and personality, become astonishing. It is at least possible that the Spartan assertion was a libel.

85. 1. τελευτήσαντος. The restoration and death of Kleomenes must be placed after Marathon. See Appendices VII. § 6, VIII. § 5. But his exile may, perhaps, have taken place before Marathon. If the Aiginetans seized the earliest possible opportunity of remonstrating at Sparta, the trial of Leotychides, and his mission to Athens, might be dated still to the summer of 490 m.c. But the express date of Hdt. for these events, 'after the death of Kleomenes,' and even more the general perspective, and the difficulty of finding room for these affairs while the Persian fleet was these affairs while the Fersian fleet was already in the Aegean, make it more reasonable to suppose that Hdt. here unconsciously anticipates events. Cp. c. 91 infra, and Appendices II. c. 3. The Ephors alone apparently had sat in judgment on Aparently had sat in judgment on Aparently had sat in judgment on the content of the content of the content of the phrase of the phrase the phrase the phrase of the content of the conten and in the present case the phrase συναγαγόντες points to something more composite. Was the court made up of the Ephors and Gerontes? (ep. up of the Ephors and Gerontes? (cp. 5. 40 supra, with the addition of Leonidas!). Or was the question, as the matter was an 'international' one, referred to a religious tribunal? Or was it a popular court, of the whole Apells maybe? (ἐκδοτον γενόμενον ὑπολ πολιηπέων). In any case the decision looks grossly unjust, for Leotychides had only performed a duty to Hellas, and probably under authority from the government, ep. ce. 49, 50 supra. Had he too his enemies in Sparts, who were prepared to find er make an excuse for dethroning him. At best the decision looks like a political not a judicial one. That the Spartans should take hostages of the Atlanticas and hand them over to the Atlanticas are radiated for Atlanticas. Athenians as pledges for Aiginetan good behaviour, and then shortly after completely reverse their attitude seel completely reverse their attitude stell recover or attempt to recover the hest-ages from Athens, unless something important had happened meanwhile, anot likely. Supposing the saizure of the hostages to have taken place in 491/90 g.c., and the application for their restoration three or four years later, a great deal had happened, enough indeed fully to account for a complete reversal of policy at Sparta. Atherere reversal of policy at Sparta. Ather-had defeated the Persian at Marythen, had assaulted Paros and the Kyklades. and was showing signs of all aggrandizement. Sparta on the other hand had taken nothing by the repulse of the Barbarian, and look harrowly escaped a demestic revolution. Egypt perhaps was in revolt; Darcios was nearing his end; there was no inmediate danger of a return of the Persian. To set the Aiginetans free, to revive Dorian interests in the island, might Dorian interests in the Island, might seem, under altered circumstances, no bad stroke of policy.

86, 2. παραθήκην. Cp. c. 73 supra. The diplomatic attitude and reply of the Athenians has a Themistoklean ingenuity about it. this time have been equal to the occasion.

6. Ιλέξε . . τάδε. One hardly knows which more to admire in the speech of which more to admire in the speech of the horizontal at Athens, the perfection of the narrative or the inconsequence of the logic. The Athenians doubtless were charmed by the one, but easily evaded the other. It was not so easy for one Spartan to easile 30,000 Athenians! (cp. 5. 97 supra). The story has a Delphian ring about it: and this moral tale is put into the mouth of a

The observation that death comes alike to the just and to the unjust has been made: likewise the observation that the wicked man flourishes at times to a remarkable extent. But these observations, which perplex an individualistic society, gave little trouble at Delphi in old days. The sanction of morality still rested firmly upon the idea of the family, and the need of gentile continuity. In this sanction the belief in another life is involved, for the maintenance of the family is relative to the maintenance of the lamily is relative to the maintenance of the ancestor-worship, and its corollaries. Still, the complete absence of any appeal to a future Heaven and Hell, or to the personal punishment of the unjust man in the other world, is significant of a pre-Pythagorean stage of thought, and had perhaps a special charm for Hdt. who was no great admirer of the Samian plagiarist. See 4. 95 supra.

51. tσον δύνασθαι. Could the 'inter-nality' of righteousness, and the neces-sity of the 'good will,' be more strongly affirmed than in this 'lively oracle'! The sequel is tremendous: Glaukos makes restitution, but is not forgiven: his posterity blotted out, and his name become a bye-word. The king proves too much! The Athenians had already "made occasions for delay," which betrayed their mind; if the will, not the act, was to be punished, they were already doomed;—supposing, indeed, that their case ran on all fours with the case of Glaukos, and that Leotychides was justified in assuming the role of the Milesian depositor: a parallel, the exactitude of which they were intelligent enough to disown. It is obvious from what follows that Hdt, approves of the action of the Athenians, but was not going to throw away so delightful a story on mere critical grounds.

§ 8 1. 50. Van H. reads mapathens. Cp.

The events next recorded seem to show that Hdt., so far as he clearly conceived the dates at all, placed all the events narrated cc. 87-93 (with certain obvious exceptions in cc. 90, 91) previous to the battle of Marathon. But this conception is almost certainly a tissue of anichronisms. It has been indicated above that the death of Kleomenes is the point of departure, and that Kleomenes died after Marathon (ep. c. 85 supra). Con-siderable displacements have occurred state the placements have continued apparently in the chronology of the wars between Athens and Aigina, on which see Appendix VIII.

wholly in the wrong. The story is probably of Attic origin.

5. &Sikéweea. The implicit assumption here is certainly that the dõikia, of which the Aiginetans complain, is the refusal of the Athenians to restore the hostages. It would be a wonder that, if these hostages were in Athens, the Athenians did not exchange them for their own leading citizens captured in the Theoris. They probably did. Cp.

6. πεντετηρίε. The MSS. have πεντήρης. Schömann's emendation is confirmed by R. Van Herwerden corrects to rerractiple. There was a temple of Athene on Sunion (Pausan. 1. 1 ad init.) and there may have been a quadrennial festival held there (νενίκηκα δὲ τριήρει μὲν ἀμιλλώμενος ἐπὶ Σουνίψ, Lysias, 21. 5). That the Athenians had a quinquereme at this date is incredible. The first quinquereme was not built at Athens until after the date of the 'Αθηναίων πολιτεία. Cp. op. cit. ed. Sandys, c. 46, p. 169 n. &ν secl. Stein. 88. 2. οὐκάτι ἀνεβάλλοντο, 5. 49. His second offence, if not his first, was 'popular,' cp. c. 91 infra. One could wish to have light on the relation of his policy to the treatment of the Attic prisoners, who had, however, been exchanged long before. Cp. Appendix VIII. § 5.

7. èv тү те . . каl . . ès түч. Stein regards these words as referring to two different days. It is more likely that Hdt.'s grammar is clumsy than that the conspiracy was so much disjointed. You may name the day for a coup d'état, but how can you say how long you will hold out afterwards? The Athenians were surely to be on the spot the very day of the democratic émeute. Such miscarriages are not uncommon. Cp.

Thucyd. 4. 89 for a celebrated instance.
89. 3. où yap truxou kth. This is an astounding statement, unless it is to be supposed that Athenian vessels were absent on foreign service just at the time when they were needed to assist Nikodromos. The only foreign services which could come into the reckoning, on any hypothesis, would be (1) the avgedition to Lonic in 400 n.c. expedition to Ionia in 498 B.C. See 5. 97, 99. (2) The expedition to Paros, c. 489 B.C., cc. 132 ff. infra. The latter τήσι Λίγινητέων συμβαλείν. case may be ruled out at once, for (1) Miltiades took seventy ships to Paros, (2) it is searcely credible that the Corinthian gift to Athens was after Marathon. In regard to the cutlier case, the argument is not so clear. The Aiginetans may very well have taken advantage of the absence of twenty. Athenian ships in Ionia, and the Corinthians may have replaced the absent ships by an equivalent: but if so, the occasion was not the coup d'état of Nikedromes, unless we are presented to take that avant corrected to the coup. pared to take that event completely out of its connexion and sequence here. It is possible of course that the anachronisms in the text reach that extent, chronisms in the text reach that extent, and that the support given to Nikodronies had nothing to say to the seizure of the Athenian primores. In this case the conspiracy of Nikodronies would fall between 498-491 n.c. The reizure of the Theoris, and the exchange of hostages, would fall after Marathon. That hypothesis conflicts with the date indicated for the settlement of the Airington of the A with the date indicated for the settlement of the Aiginetan exiles at Sunion, c. 90 infra. In fine, the Corinthian ships were probably bent to Athens before Marathon (circ. 498 B.C.) and are here erroneously put into connexion with the democratic coup dietat at Aigina. Cp. Appendix VIII. § 5.
6. τοῦτον τὸν χρόνον. In 180 B.C. the Athenians and Corinthians are at loggerheads (S. 61). The goodwill of the Corinthians did not long survive the self-aggrandizement of survive the self-aggrandizement of Athens under Miltioles and Themis-tokles. As Miltioles took seventy ships to Paros (c. 132 infra) the Corinthian gift must be dated before Marathon, at a time when the interest of Corinth lay in supporting Athens against Aigina (cp. 5, 75, 92 supra). The emphasis on the words here shows that there is a contrast in the attitude of Corinth to Athens at the time of writing. The Corinthian orator in Thueyd. 1, 41 (483 g.c.) is represented as taking credit for this gift; it was therefore an accepted for at Athens, but Thucydides does not date it (ἐπέρ τὰ Μηδικά is (1) vague, (2) u gloss).

7. πενταδράχμους, α merely nominal price (5 frames aprices, cp. δίμετως δ. 77, and c. 70 supra). The law is a curious one, designed to protect Corinthian commerce, or, perhaps, to keep some secrets of Corinthian ship-building laws. So the Remands before the ing dark. So the Romans, before the second Punic war, had no notion how second runte war, and no notion how to construct a quinquerence: but a stranded Carthaginian vessel served them as a model (Polyb. 1, 20, 10-16, but ep. 1, 50, 8). The Corinthium law can hardly be supposed to leave been quite so simple as Hdt, implies: but evidently there was some prohibition, which was evaded by a technical conformity, or legal fiction.

remark would hardly have been made if some considerable time had not been thought of between the escape of Nikodromos and the settlement at Sunion. The one occurred before, the other perhaps after, the battle of Marathon, in the conception of Herodotus. But he perhaps misconceives the chronological sequence of events, see Appendix VIII. § 5.

5. theorax  this certainly appears to be a reference to the expulsion of the Aiginetans from their island by the Athenians in the first summer of the 'Peloponnesian' war, B.C. 431, Thuc. 2. 27. As such it is among the latest allusions in the work of Hdt. How long after it occurred Hdt. wrote this passage does not appear, but it is obvious that Hdt. was not acquainted with the subsequent fate of the exiles in 424 B.C., Thuc. 4. 57. The whole chapter might be an insertion (aperθήκη 7. 171, or poo- θήκη 4. 30), and perhaps much more than the single chapter. At the time of the expulsion excuses may have been wanting against the Aiginetans, and this old story raked up. The 6γος charges were much in evidence at the time, cp. Thuc. 1. 126, 128: but if this story had been in circulation before the outbreak of the war would not Thucydides have noticed it?

Cp. c. 89 supra.

Toronto of the Athenians over the Aiginetans seems to be dated by Hdt. before Marathon, and indeed the very same year: an inconsequent and incredible arrangement. Cp. Appendix VIII. § 5. That a thousand Argives were prepared to volunteer for this service seems to show that the loss in the war with Kleomenes was exaggerated, c. $3 supro. True, the Argive muster-roll had been recruited by the admission of the 'slaves' to the franchise, ibid. Yet it was hardly these new citizens who volunteered their services to the Dorian oligarchs in Agina for the war against Athens, nor was their general, Eurybates, of servile antecedents. The record plainly supports the hypothesis that these events are ante-dated.

This victory of the Aiginetans over the Athenians follows Aiginetans over the Athenians follows two defeats, one by sea and one on land (c. 72 supra), and if the reconstruction attempted in Appendix VIII. be correct, the Athenian disaster, here recorded, may have been the occasion for the psephism of Themistokles, 484-3 s.e. 94. 1. συνήπτο. For the tense cp. 5. That war was in progress between Athens and Aigina in 191-0 p.c. is, as already shown, the reverse of probable. The narrative in this chapter joins on to the narrative in c. 73 supra, not indeed in the intention of the author, but by the necessities of the case. The carlier stages of the great έχθρη (7. 145) had indeed been accomplished (5. $2 supra), and there was warfare between 498-491 s.c., but the extradition of the hostages reduced Aigina to quiescence, probably till after Marathon and Paros. Cp. c. 87 supra, and Appendix VIII. § 5.

2. αναμιμνήσκοντος . μεμνήσθαι. The expression is clumsy; van Herwerden brackets μεμνήσθαι μαν τῶν Αθηναίων. This memorialising has been going on for eight years, see 5. 105 supra. Yet necording to 7. 133. Darcies had just sent (c. 48 supra) heralds to Athens to demand earth and water, and his messengers have been east into the Barathron: an outrage which here contributes nothing to his resentment : presumably either because Hdt. when writing this passage knew nothing of the said outrage, or had already related it, or blindly followed a source in which it was not recorded. The alternative would be to suppose that he deliberately suppressed it. On any supposition a creat remains. The Athenians are here even contrasted with the Hellenes who had refused earth and material careful. who had refused earth and water.

The Persian motive for making for Navos has already been stated. The two amendments are not untually exclusive. Van Herwerden has spared of Il/poor, but it is a question whether it should not go out. the ideas of Peisistratos (Thuc. 3. 104, cp. 5. 63, 69 supra), and Hippias, expelled from Athens by Delphi (5. 63 supra), and abandoned by Sparta (6. 93 supra), was not likely to overlook the use to be made of Delos, after his restoration. If there is any force in hypopeve here, it should mean that the speech was addressed to the men of Delos assembled.

7. ix Baoulios 38e inio talvas. The policy of the Persian Empire was tolerant towards the deities of the conquered, and there is no sign of iconoclasm, or of a religious propaganda under the Achaemenids. The opposite idea arose mainly from a misinterpretation of the story of the pseudo-Smerdis in the light of the Behistun inscription (e.g. Rawlinson, Hdt. Appendix, Bk. iii. Essay ii. vol. ii. pp. 548 ff.). Evidences more recently discovered (the Kyreian inscriptions from Babylon, inscriptions of Kambyses and Dareios himself in Egypt) have led to a more correct estimate. (Cp. Ed. Meyer, Gesch. d. Allerth. i. p. 608.) The treatment of Delos (and Delphi) is more significant than the destruction of Athens, in this connexion. Even in regard to Athens the anecdotes show that there was no crusade against the gods of Greece. Cp. 7. 43, 8. 54,

Over and above this general policy of toleration the Asiatics would be at no loss to identify Apollo and Artemis with their own Sun and Moon divinities. The offering of Datis on the Delian altar would please all pious Ionians, and even a genuine act of devotion may have been not wholly devoid of a political purpose.

seems to say, without specifying whether the talents are Attic or other: 300 T. worth hardly less incredible. Hultsch, Métrologie², p. 129 rationalises the statement to the effect that in the sense of the Persian [Mede?] who made the offering, the 300 'weights' of frankincense, each of which amounted to (betrug) a shekel [i.e. light Babylonian shekel], might be regarded as equivalent in worth to so many shekels of gold, i.e. daries. "On this hypothesis the value of the offering amounted to exactly one Talent of silver." Cp. Ridgway, Origin of Currency, p. 6. This may explain the origin of Hdt.'s blunder, but it does not cancel it. the sense of the Persian [Mede!] who not cancel it.

98. 3. pôra. Why the advance was made first on Eretria, why Euboea rather than the medizing Aigina was to be made the basis of operations against Attica, it is not easy to deter-mine. Perhaps the prejudices, or even the superstitions of Hippias, were conthe superstitions of Hippias, were consulted, he leading the Persians not merely to Marathon (c. 102 infra) but to Euboea, whence he had already 'returned' once in triumph with his father, 1. 91. Perhaps the medizing party in Eretria (cc. 100, 101 infra) were already in communication with the Baybayiana. with the Barbarians. Perhaps the advance on Euboea and the east coast was calculated to lull the alarms of the Peloponnesians and to retard their assistance; if so, the calculation was realised. The attack on Attica was made from the same side as if the Mede had advanced from Thrace and Macedon. Possibly the Aiginetans were expected to do something for the Persian, on the other side.

4. Δs έλεγον Δήλιοι. The assertion is a double one: (1) that presently after the departure of Datis from Delos for Eretria, in the summer of 490 B.C. for Eretria, in the summer of 490 n.c. there was an earthquake; (2) that the said earthquake was the first and last earthquake ever felt in Delos 'down to me (my visit).' How much of this double assertion is given on the authority of the Delians is not quite clear. Did the Delians simply report the earthquake, or did they assert, further, that it was a unique experience! In either case it is natural to interpret the passage as implying a visit by Hdt. to Delos, some time before visit by Hdt. to Delos, some time before he actually wrote this passage (ελεγον . . μέχρι έμεῦ). It is natural further to conclude that at the time of writing Hdt. had not heard of any other seismos before or since his visit, or he would probably have mentioned it. This statement, however, is not inconsistent with the occurrence of an earthquake subsequently to his visit, nor even perhaps quite strictly with his having heard tell of such an occurrence; and he might even be contradicting such an assertion. Thucydides (2. 8) also reports an earthquake at Delos as occurring a little before the outbreak of war in 431 B.C., and perfectly unique in Hellenic history, and regarded, not without reason, as portentous: Δήλος εκινήθη δλίγον πρό τοιτων, πρότερον ούπω σεισθείσα άφ' οῦ Έλληνες μέμνηνται. έλέγετο δὲ καὶ ἐδόκει ἐπὶ τοῦς μέλλοιος γενήσεσθαι σημήναι. It is obviously impossible to reconcile the statement of the Athenian with the statement of the 'Thurian' historian. Thucydides asserts of his own knowledge that a unique earthquake took place just before the l'eloponnesian war. If so, before the l'eloponnesian war. If so, the carthquake reported by Hdt. as having taken place in the summer of 490 n.c. never took place. Thucydides is obviously centradicting Hdt. It by no means follows that Thucydides is right. There may have been only one shaking of Delos. It may have occurred in 490 n.c. as reported by Hdt. Thucydides, writing or retouching the history of the Archidamian war some thirty years ofter its out-break, and doing all he could to magnify its importance and depreciate magnify its importance and depreciate the glories of the wars against the barbarian, may with greater or less excuse have shifted the earthquake some sixty years down. There may have been two earthquakes, one in 490 n.c. and really unique at the date of Hdt.'s visit to the island, or interview with the 'Delians,' and still unique, so far as he knew, when he composed and when he revised his own work. and when he revised his own work: the other in 491 n.c. but not unique, as Thucydides deliberately asserts. There may have been two or more earthquakes at Delos in the course of ages, though the island had a good repute for stability:—but perhaps every carthquake in the holy isle ought to have been unique, and was therefore unique, according to the local authorities. That Hdt. is actually contradicting the report of an earthquake in 431 g.c. afterwards taken up by Thucydides is the least plausible hypothesis; still, as Hdt reports events of that data and Hdt. reports events of that date, and later, his text here makes against the supposition that the report was true. Other possibilities are also not to be wholly excluded. There may have been an earthquake at some date unascertainable, previous to Hdt.'s visit to Delos, or to the composition of this passage, which Hdt. claims for the Median and Thucydides for the Peloponnesian war. There may have been no carthquake at Delos at all. But on the whole it seems most probable that the earthquake occurred at the date given by Hdt., or at least before the Medic war, and that later pragmatism annexed it to the Peloponnesian.

7. Int γάρ κτλ. It has been argued that this passage must have been written after the death of Artaxerxes Makrocheir in 425 g.c. (cp. Thuc. 4. 50). If so, this would be the latest reference in Hdt. to contemporary events, and the end of the sentence would certainly have to be taken as including the events of the be taken as including the events of the war in Greece 431-425 R.C. But the argument is inconclusive. If it were said: 'During the reigns of George, William, and Victoria, England has made greater progress than during the twenty reigns previous'; such a remark would not imply that the present Queen's reign was over (δ μη γένοιτο). Artaxerxes I. reigned for upwards of a generation, coming to the throne probably about 464 R.C. (Duncker, viii. 293). Hdt. might have written as he does here many years before the king was gathered to his fathers. The identification of reigns and generations should not be pressed in favour of the latest possible date, for it proves too much. Three generations with Hdt. make a hundred years (2. 142), but the three reigns here referred to, even if regarded as complete, fall short of the century (521-425). The identification of reigns and generations only shows how loose the chronological reference is. There is thus no necessity to conclude that this passage was written after 431 R.C.

9. Ekoo': Allas yevets. Twenty generations=6663 years. If these be added to the date of the accession* of Dareios (521 B.C.) they bring us to 1188 B.C.; if to the date of the birth of Dareios (551 B.C.) they bring us to 1218 B.C., in either case within measurable distance of the Trojan war, the aera of which according to Hdt. is about 1250 B.C. (2. 145). Hdt. may be taken to say that since the days of Agamemnon Hellas had never had such cause of woe as 'the last hundred years or so.' It is strange to find Kyros omitted, to say nothing of the wars with the Mermnadae. The generation as distinguished from the reign of Dareios would take us back nearly to the accession of Kroisos (Herodotus' sera in Bk. 1), but the passage before us here is not scientific but rhetorical chronology, and it is labour lost to attempt to harmonise it with Hdt.'s other data.

11. adviso viso kappidator repl visapping solutions. These words would apply to the circumstances of Hellas in 431 B.C. and following years, but they would have been justified by the events which followed the first rupture with Sparta (c. 461-451 B.C.), and at any rate must be taken to refer to them.

12. o'68ty fy dence. On ideal principles it would perhaps have been still more proper for this portent to have occurred two years or so earlier, before the Ionian revolt, before the affair of Naxos, if not, indeed, on the first appearance of Kyros in Western Asia in 546 B.C. seling in regarding the passage as spurious, and removes it from the text. 99. 1. of St β. answers τοῦτο μέν, c. 98 supra.

3. περιπλέοντες. Δ certain amount of time seems to have been consumed in this Periplus of the Kyklades. The first real resistance is experienced at Kurystos in Euboca. The old Peisistratid connexion with the Kyklades may have counted for something in Karystians is in strong contrast to that of the Ionians and Acolians, who served of the Ionians and Acolians, who served with the Persian fleet: but they too are reduced and 'medize.' Cp. 8. 66, 112. Their subjection to Athens (9. 105) would be at least partially justified thereby (cp. Thue. 1. 98, and for the principle, Thue. 6. 82, 83).

5. dorwyctrovas. The Karystians were accounted Dryapes, not Ionians (Thue, 7. 57, 4), hence perhaps the choice of the term.

100. 3. 'Aθηναίων. The application of the Eretrians was presumably brought before the Ekklesia. According to the story given in this chapter the Eretrians had only themselves to thank for their subsequent fate. Eretria was divided against itself. The Athenians, indeed, evacuated Euboca, and left it to its fate, but only at the express entreaty of a leading and loyal citizen of Eretria. Strangely enough, neither he nor his partisans, though foreseeing the inevitable, accompanied the Athenians in their retreat. The apologetic tendency of this story is patent. To have de-tached or left these 4000 hoplites, who doubtless fought in their own Phylae at Marathon, for the support or defence of Eretria, would have been, at the time, an heroic counsel. Afterwards, it may have seemed as though more of a stand might have been made at Eretria. But this story supplies the raisen enginerante for the withdrawal. Divided counsels, positive treachery, express and pressing authority fully justified the action. The complete omission of all notice of the advantage to Athens of these 4000 soldiers in Atties makes the story the more to be suspected (ep. Weeklein, Tradition der Verserkriege, p. 30). Perhaps the Athenians were justified politically and strategically in confining their own action to Attica, and the message to Sparta, c. 106 infra, betrays no bad conscience, but rather a hint that Sparta, if any one, was to blame for the loss of Eretria. From the Eubocan point of view, would there have been much to choose between Sparta's treatment of Athens, and the

4. τούς τετρακισχιλίους : cp. 5. 77.

6. οὐδὶν ὑγιὰς βούλευμα. βούλευμα del. Cobet. Eretria was of old favourable to the Peisistratids (1. 62 and c. able to the Peasistraties (1. 62 and c. 98 supra). But the part taken in the Ionian revolt, 5. 99, and the obstinate defence of the city on this occasion, seem to show that Eretria by this time was for freedom. The story here rather implies that there was but one true man in a rotten state. A passage in Xenophon, Hell. 2. 1, 6, suggests that the medicing variety was at this that the medizing party was at this time non-existent. The king had counted a single partisan, one Gongylos, in Eretria, but he was in exile, and had met his reward. This Gongylos may have been to Eretria what Hippias was to Athens. But if Xenophon l. c. is accurate, the Gongylos there mentioned as alive in 399 B.c. cannot have medized in 490 B.c., much less previously. It Blakesley's suggestion is correct, that the Gongylos of Xenophon is grandson of the Gongylos who first medized, then Xenophon has expressed himself very inaccurately. That indeed is not unlikely. Thucydides, 1, 126, mentions a Gongylos of Eretria as an internuntius between Pausanias and the great king in 477-6 s.c. This might be the original traitor, whom Xenophon has confounded with his son or grand-Hdt. we may suppose that he had already fiel to the Medes, and was perhaps now in the suite of Datis or of Hingary

7. Suparias léas. It is providential that these Eretrians are finally to be quartered in the neighbourhood of a well τὸ παρέχεται τριφασίαι ίδέαι, c. 119 infra. The criticism in this chapter is unsound. There are two parties in Eretria, the party for taking to the mountains, the party for surrender and medism. (There is, indeed, a third 186a-the one righteous man, Aischines.) The medizing party has its way, and yet the city instead of surrendering stands a siege, and that no make-believe, six days. Duncker, vii. 118 n., thinks that Hdt.'s source of information was the exiled Eretrians on the Tigris.

Cp. 5. 64 supra. For six days resistance was maintained successfully in ance was maintained successfully in Eretria: then treachery handed over the city to the foe. Gongylos, who we may suppose was in the ranks of the Persians, may have acted on this occasion as go-between. The total destruction of Eretria and the captivity of the inhabitants (cp. c. 119 infra) might be thought to show that it was no control to Persian todies, which was not seen to the Persian todies. part of the Persian policy, chiefly swayed perhaps by Hippias, to establish a local despot in Eretria: Gongylos had already received his reward, or was secure of it (Xenophon, l. c. supra). That the destruction of Eretria was a rice is probably a pragmatic exaggera-tion. (Cp. Introduction, p. cav.) Eretria was restored on the old site Bretria was restored on the old site (pace Strabo, l. c. supra), but never recovered this blow; she sent seven galleys to Salamis, S. 46, and less than 600 hoplites to Plataia, 9. 28. hyov... στρατηγοί δέκα. As the Polemarch too went to Marathon (c. 109 infra), or rather to Probalinthos (cp. Appendix X. § 31), it appears that the city was left without any of its regular military officers. Hdt. indeed does not here use the words of δέκα στρατηγοί, cp. c. 105 infra, but his main conception of the constitutional situation is anachronistic. The Polemarch was probably leading (ηγε). the story is coloured by the later constitutional practices of the Athenian

Stein interprets this passage to mean that Miltiades was the last, the order of the Strategi following the annual order of the Phylae (cp. c. 111 infra), which they commanded and to which they belonged. (Cp. 'Αθην. πολ. c. 22.) In this case Miltiades, according to Stein, commanded the Oineis, to which his Deme, Lakiadae, belonged, and this Phyle stood on the extreme left in the order of battle. But cp. c. 104 infra, and Appendix X. § 23. Among the colleagues of Miltiades were Stesilaos (c. 114 infra), Aristeides (Plutarch, Arist. 5) and possibly even Themistokles.

5. Olymerása. The dates of the three victories are probably Ol. 61, 62, 63, or Ol. 62, 63, 64. Clinton prefers the latter (F. H. ii. 2 p. 232), Duncker the former, Gesch. d. Alterth. vi. 5 p. 469.

6. Tours & evelkagea, "gained the very same honour which had before been carried off by Miltiades" (R.). If this is what Hdt. meant to say he took an uncommonly roundabout way of saying it; and was it worth saying? Besides, there is nothing in the text to justify the "before." Some have understood efereikasoba in the sense 'transferred': the victory which he won he transferred to his brother, gave the honour to his brother, cp. παραδιδοί Πεισιστράτψ ἀνακηρυχθήναι just below. This gives a very good sense, but only by violence done to the verb. In any case the grammar of the passage is exceptionable, but to preserve the correct sense of εξενείκασθαι one might take ταύτην μέν την νίκην άνελόμενόν μιν as an accusatious pendens and repeat συνέβη before τῷ κτλ. The sense of the passage would then run: καὶ αὐτῷ φεὐγοντι Ὁλυμπιάδα ἀνελέσθαι τεθρίππψ συνέβη και τῷ ὁμομητρίφ άδελφεῷ τώντὸ εξενείκασθαι. Kimon won the victory, but Miltiades had the credit of it. (With rword cp. rours, c. 105. l. 3 infra.) The 'national' law of the Olympic meeting so far recognised the 'municipal' laws of the Greek states severally as to exclude from the honours of the dγώ» citizens under άτιμία. This at least was the case in the fourth century. Cp. Smith, Dict. of Antiquities2, 862 a. Hence Kimon φεύγων and ατιμος could not have himself proclaimed victor.

(2) The Thelos, in the inner Kerameikos. (3) The new town-hall, on the north side of the Akropolis. Cp. Curtius, Startly. pp. lxxxix. 51, 93, 244, 392. If Curtius is right in ascribing (3) to Demetrics of Phaleron (sp. c. p. 244), it may be ruled out. It is doubtful whether the Tholos was called the Prytaneion by any early or correct authority. It would therefore appear that we must here understand (1). But the site of this Theseian Prytaneion (Thue. 2, 15, 3) is theoretical, and it is observable that Thucydides Lethough fixing the position of the older temples leaves the position of the (older) town-hall undefined.

11. πρό του άστιος κτλ reads like autopsy. The country of the Philaids was close to Athens: πρός γάρταϊς Μελιτίου πέλαις καλοιμένους έστιν έν Κοίλη τὰ καλούμενα Γκιμώνια μνήματα

19. πάτρφ, the ομομήτρου άδελφεδι of Kimon is πάτρω to Kimon's sons. πατράδελφοι would be a more correct term for the relationship. But ep. notes to ce. 34 ff. supra. If Kypselos f. of Miltiades had been full brother to Stesagoras f. of Kimon, Stesagoras the clder would have been patricus (as well as stepfather) of Miltiades the oikies: this Miltiades would have had an agnatic kinship with Kimon his δμομήτριος άδελφεδι, and might therefore easily have been described as πάτρωι to Stesagoras the younger.

Stesagoras the younger.

104. 2. ηκων (c. 41 supra) ιστρατήγιε 'Αθηναίων again suggests, or at least would probably have suggested to readers in Hdt.'s own day, that Militade was commander-in-chief: though not, of course, that he was the only Strategos.

If we may suppose that the enemies who prosecuted him on this occasion were the same as those who prosecuted him, more successfully, on a later occasion, then this prosecution was the work of a circle or clique to which Xanthippos belonged, i.e. presumably the Alkmaionid party. Cp. c. 136 infra, and Appendix XI.

δικαστήριον, 'a jury-court.' The procedure on the second occasion was different, cp. c. 136 infra. The Chersonese was already regarded as Αττική $\gamma \hat{\eta}$ (c. 140 infra), and a γραφή τυραννίδος, or the more general προδοσίας was known at least to the later Attic Law (op. Meier and Schömann, Das Attische Process, 341 ff.). It is only remarkable that the procedure in this case is not by είσαγγελία, and that the Areiopages has nothing to say to the matter. But such omissions in Hdt. are not surprising, nor can we be sure how far his report is discoloured by the analogies of the Reformed Judicature of Ephialtes. See 'Αθη». πολ. c. 25, Aristot. Pol. 2. 12, 2, 1274a. Is it possible that the deraστήριον in this case was the Areiopagos? If so, among its services in the Persian wars (Aristot. Pol. 8. 4, 8, 1304 , 'Aθ. πολ. c. 23) would have to be reckoned its acquittal of Miltiades.

10. alpetels ind too shipor, i.e. by the Ekklesia, not merely by one of the Phylae. But this description is almost certainly an anachronism, though it may suit with the subsequent presentation of Miltiades as the γγεμών among the Strategi at Marathon ('Αθ. τολ. c. 22. Cp. Appendix IX. § 13). The date of this election might be the spring of 490 B.c., or he may have been Strategos more than one year in succession.

2. Φειδεππίδην. φιλιππίδην R et scriptorum testimonia (Stein). Φειλεππίδην must be right. The form is preserved by R, in Nepos, vit. Milt. 4, and in Pausan. 1. 28, 4, Pliny 7. 20, Solinus l.c. infra c. 106. Aristophanes would never have made 'Pheidippides' the control Strengides if the revue had son of Strepsiades, if the name had been consecrated in the Athenian traditions of Marathon: moreover, the corruption from Philippides to Pheidippides, for the ημεροδρόμης, is easier to understand than the reverse. Cp. further, Appendix X. § 3. The form ημεροδρόμης is guaranteed by a RV against S (Holder), and by a variation

Cp. πολλαχῆ «μέν» (Naber) γενομένου σφε ήδη χρησίμου. The cult was perhaps revived after the god's service at Marathon. On the connexion with Arkadia cp. 4. 203. Blakesley (notes 240-242) has some interesting conjectures, but he is wrong in taking λαμπάτ as an 'illumination. M. Breton (Athènes, 2 Ed. p. 186) has the remark: "Chr. Wordsworth (Athens and Attica, c. xii.) prétend que cetto statue orne anjourd'hui le vestibule de la bibliothèque de Cambridge." But all that Wordsworth affirmed (op. cit. p. 69) is that the statue in the grotto was "perhaps that which was dedicated by Miltiades, and for which Simonides wrote the inscription, and that now stands in the vestibule of the Public Library at Cambridge." The statue in question is doubtless that in the Fitzwilliam Museum. Clarke, xi. rpowacopopos, "discovered in a garden below the grotto of Pan at the foot

The possage is taken from Pliny, 7, 20 (84), where the received text has MCXL stadia; one control of the processive of the process of the proce C has probably dropped out (ep. Plinii Nat. Hist. 9. τοίσι δὲ ἐαδε. It would be fil-

lacious to argue from this passage that it was possible (constitutional) at this date opocpar dalreir without an antecedent vote of the Apella, authorising the policy. The exact moment for mobilisation or action may have been left to the authorities, now, as in much later days. Xen. Hell. 6, 5, 10 may be taken as an example of the normal λύειν τὸν νόμον ἢν γὰρ ἱσταμένου τοῦ μηνὸς εἰνάτη, εἰνάτη δὲ ούκ έξελεύσεσθαι έφασαν μή ού πλήρεος έόντος τοῦ κύκλου.

11. ήν γάρ κτλ. We must take this passage to mean that the Spartans could not start on the ninth, or any other day, till full moon (15th), and not that the full moon might have fallen on the ninth. Did this rule hold for all months, or only for this particular month? The ancients understood the month Y The ancients understood the rule as valid generally, cp. Pausan. 1. 28, 4, Schol. Aristoph. Achara. 84, Plutarch, Mor. 861. Stein confines the rule to the month Karneios, in which the festival lasted from 7th to 15th. It seems well-nigh incredible that the Spartans should have put up with such a hindrance to military operations every month. The limitation of the obstructions of the state of the contract of the state of the contract of tion to a single month makes it more possible to maintain with Grote, and against Rawlinson, the bona fides of the Spartans on this occasion. The great haste which they used when they started on the 15th points to the same conclusion. This argument of course assumes the truth of the tradi-tion, and that the action, or inaction, of the Spartans has not been rationalised, or religionised, by afterthought. Cp. Appendix VII. § 11 ad finem.

3. #bónes b 'Iwan's ark. Whether Hippias had any such dream as that here ascribed to him; whether he coughed a tooth out on the sand of Marathon; whether he conjectured that the latter misfortune was a fulfilment of the former visitation, and made known this depressing conjecture to those about him; these are questions which can be decided only on general grounds. The story is not inappropriate to the reputation of Hippias for piety of a certain kind. Cp. 5. 93 supra. His brother Hipparchos was a dreamer too, 5. 56 supra, but the story reads rather like a bitter jest at the exiled despot's expense. Cp. Appendix X. § 3.

7. τοθτο μέν . . τοῦτο δέ. The record here seems to represent Hippins not merely as guide, but as Field-Marshal of the Persian forces (τὰ ἀνδράποδα . ἀπέβησε . τὰς νέας δρμής οὖτος . . τοῦ βαρβάρους διέτασσε). It is important to observe that the ships were left riding at anchor, not drawn up on shore.

103. 2. τημένει Ἡρακλέος. This is the Herakleion at Marathon presumably, and not the Herakleion in Kynesargos, cc. 116 infra, 103 supra. The cult of Herakles at Marathon was accounted the chles in Greece (Papears 1, 22, 4). the oldest in Greece (Pausan, 1, 32, 4) and was perhaps a Phoenician importaand was perhaps a Phoenician importa-tion. Strictly speaking, this close was not at 'Marathon,' but near the modern Vrana, as Lolling appears to have proved (Mitth, dos D. arch. Instituts, i. 89 ff.). This determination of the site must govern our conception of the operations. See Appendix X. § 31. 4. πόνους, c.g. the war with Thebes 5. 77 supra, where, however, their services are ignored.

5. 58. That the account of the origin of the alliance between Athens and Plataia should be introduced here. out of its natural and chronological relations, is remarkable, the more so as Hdt. has already mirrated no less than three expeditions of Khomenes into central Greece (5, 64, 72, 74 supra), to one of which this episode must be supposed to belong. This incon-sequence might be explained by the supposition that Hdt. had composed the story of Marathon, this cocurrus included, before composing the narra-tive in the fifth Book where it would have come in more appropriately: in that case, however, we might have expected a forward reference to this passage in the fifth Book. (There is a parallel case to such an omission in the story of the piper Talde Jaco 7, 103 ff., cpd. with 6. 48, 94.) Or the story of the Plataian alliance may have formed an integral portion of the (Attic) tradition about the battle of Marathon, and Hdt. may be keeping close to his sources. Or the explanation might be sought in the supposition that before Hdt. composed the story of Marathon special attention had been attracted to the case of Plataia and its relations to Athens, as in 431 n.c. (Thue, 2, ad init.). That this passage was written or revised after the destruction of Plataia in 427 n.c. (Thue. 3, 68) seems improbable. It might be a late insertion (by Hdt.'s own hand), though why in this case he did not insert it in its natural place in Bk. 5.

7. Κλομένα. Thue. 3. 68, 2 dates the alliance ninety two years before the destruction in 427 n.c. That date brings us to 519 n.c. Grote, in an unanswerable note (vol. iii. p. 583, an unanswerable note (vol. iii. p. 58%, pt. ii. e. xxxi.), has proved that this date is highly improbable. It is not, however, necessary to suppose that Thucydides in this case committed a blunder. Let it be granted that a copyist added one Δ too many ([ΦΔΔΔΙΗ] for [ΦΔΔΔΙΗ] in an uneial MS. of Thucydides, and the error is traced to the likeliest source. (This is the suggestion of the late Professor A. von Gutschmid, ep. Busolt, Die Lokedaimonier, i. 397 n.) The date of the alliance is 500 n.c. if the application to Kleomener was made on the occasion of Kleomenes was made on the occasion of his second expedition into Atties: ep. 5. 72 supra. Ed. Meyer, Gesch. d. Allerth. ii. p. 780, § 478 n. (1893), reverts to the earlier date, but he does not explain what Kleomenes < and the

On the policy of Corinth cp. c. 89 supra, 5, 92, 93. It may be observed that the Corinthian orator in Thucydides 1. 41 does not include this arbitration in the list of services to Athens.

25. τῆ μάχη. This cannot possibly be the victory recorded in 5. 77 supra, for (1) the circumstances are different, (2) it precedes the annexation of Hysiae, cp. 5. 74 supra. It therefore precedes the expedition of the Peloponnesians there recorded.

109. 1. δίχα al γνώμαι. This council of war is localised at Marathon. The question before the Strategi (for the Polemarch is ex hypothesi not present) των μέν ούκ εωντων συμβαλείν (ολίγους γάρ είναι) στρατιή τή Μήδων [συμβάλλειν], των δὲ καὶ Μιλτιάδεω κελευόντων. δίχα τε εγίνοντο καλ ενίκα ή χείρων των γνωμέων, ενθαθτα, ήν γαρ ενδεκατος ψηφιδοφόρος ο τῷ κυάμφ λαχων 'Αθηναίων πολε- 5 μαρχέειν (τὸ παλαιὸν γὰρ 'Αθηναίοι ὁμόψηφον τὸν πολέμαρχον έποιεθντο τοίσι στρατηγοίσι), ην δέ τότε πολέμαρχος Καλλίμαχος is whether to risk a battle or to act on the defensive. The previous question, whether to go out or to remain in the city, must have been raised before the march to Marathon, c. 103 sepra; but of this point Hdt. takes virtually no account. Cp. case of Eretria, c. 101 sapra, and see Appendix X. § 26.

3. τῶν δὲ καί. Perhaps Aristeides and the gallaht stesshaes son of Thrasylaes (ep. c. 105 supra), possibly even Themistokles, were among the four who supported the better judgment of Miltades. συμβάλλειν del. Stein.

5. ὁ τῷ κυάμῷ λαχῶν πολεμαρχίαν. This incidental phrase cannot prove that the let had been introduced by Kleisthenes for the Archontate: at most it proves that the Polemarch was most it proves that the Polemarch was appointed by sortition, perhaps out of the college of nine Archons, after their clection χειροτονία. But the general assumption that Hdt. thought of the Archons as appointed in 490 n.c. as they were certainly appointed in 430 n.c. κλήρφ οτ κυάμφ need not be gainsaid. It is far more likely, however, that Hdt skeath have been suited. that Hdt. should have been guilty of an anachronism in the constitutional history of Athens, than that the lot was introduced so early as is here implied. Is lidt, such a high authority on political and constitutional perspec tives! Are anachronisms so rare in his pages? Moreover, this matter of the lot is not what he is here mainly concerned about: at the time he is writing the Polemarch and the other Archons obtain office by sortition, but the Polemarch has ceased to be δμδψηφος τοῦς στρατηγοῖς: it is this fact, that in the days of Marathon the Polemarch was still a member of the college of commanders, not the circumstance that he was already an officer arageros, which affects the story. What the exact position of the Polemarch was in 490 s.c. Hdt. does not clearly indicate, but he does not say that the Polemarch had merely a casting vote in case of an equidecision among ten Strategi. The Polemarch was $\delta\mu\delta\psi\eta\phi\sigma\sigma$ τ . $\sigma\tau$. He voted therefore on all occasions. He must have been consulted before the army left Athens (c. 103), before the mission of Philippides (c. 105); and not merely at the eleventh hour. The Polemarch also fights on the right wing—nay commands it (c. 111 infra). There is indeed only one supposition which fairly makes sense of the story of Marathon. In 490 a.c. the Polemarch was still commander-in-chief, and the Strategi formed his council of war. As commander-in-chief he led the right wing, the post of honour and danger in a Greek army. Miltiades probably was the intellectual author of the Athenian tactics at Marathen, but he was not στρατηγός αὐτοκράτωρ, which is virtually the position assigned to him in the traditions of the Periklean age. It was Kallimaches not Miltiades who com-manded at Marathon. This theory, if correct, makes it more absurd than ever to suppose that the Polemarch was *reamer's. On the question of the introduction of the lot see further: On the significance of the Let and the date of its introduction at Athens in the Transactions of the Oxford Philological Society 1886/7. This note so far has been left intact, as written years before the discovery of as written years before the discovery of the treatise on the Athenian Polity, ascribed to Aristotle, which has the express statement for the date of Marathon: τούς στρατηγούς ήροθντο κατά φυλάς, έξ ἐκάστης φιλής ἔνα, τῆς δέ φελας, εξ εκαστης φιλης ενά, της σε απάσης στρατιάς ήγεμὰν ήν ὁ πολθμαρχος c. 22. This statement was probably intended to clear up the obscurity in regard to the part played by the Polemarch in Hdt.'s account of the Marathonian affair, which may have perplexed Athenian students in the fourth century n.c. as it has perplexed all modern students who have given any attention to it. It does not, however,

This speech appears to be coloured by later ideas; at least it may be doubted whether Miltiades would have shared the (later) popular view of the services of Harmodios and Aristogeiton to the cause of liberty (cp. Thuc. 6. 54, and the Lives, Marcell. § 2, Anonym. § 1). The future augured for Athens may be thought unlikely before the event. There is, however, special the event. There is, however, special point in the allusion. These Gephyraeans (5. 57 supra) were from Aphidna, like Kallimachos himself (Plutarch, Moral. 628), and in later times at least the Polemarch conducted the festival in their honour, 'Aθ. πολ. c. 58. The argument of Miltiades seems rather belated, if first urged at Vrans. (Cp. the case of Eretria, cc. 100, 101 supra.) It does not belong to Hdt.'s method to inform his hearers (or readers) from what source he derived knowledge of this intimate conference. Each yielded the honour to Miltiades, yet he postpones the engagement until his own day comes round: an inexplicible inconsequence on the showing of Hdt. Perhaps the real question with Miltiades, or rather with Kallimachos, was that the Athenians should deliver the attack, and not act merely on the defensive, rather than the question of delivering the attack on any particular day. To attack without waiting for the Spartans—unless some special circumstance arese to make an immediate attack advisable—might well have seemed an act of folly. Van Herwerden cuts the knot by inserting of before deschaesos.

4. πρυτανήνη. The word has been generally supposed in this passage to mean 'the command-in-chief, 'cp. L. & S. sub r. where no parallel is adduced. Plutarch seems to have taken this view of the passage, see Aristid. c. 5. If, however, the supreme command was really vested in the Polemarch, and the Strategi commanded each only a Phyle, some other meaning must be sought for πρετανήνη, or the word is here used in correctly. Whether Hdt. understood its correct use is another question.

In what sense, or senses, could there be a daily change in the πρετανηίη of the Strategi, the ἡγεμονία of the Pole-march remaining intact ?

In one sense προτανεία was the period during which the βουλευται of each Phyle were, so to speak, in office, i.e. one-tenth of the year. That order was determined by lot. Did the order of the Phylae in battle follow the order of the phylic prytanies for the year? Did the πριτανεύουσα φιλή for the time being hold the post of honour, with its Strategos, on the right wing, immediately in touch with the Polemarch (So Rawlinson, cp. note infra.) Might the Strategos be said to be πριτανεύων while his Phyla was πριτανεύων while his Phyla was πριτανεύων.

One great objection to that explanation may lie in the succeeding words as άριθμέστο al φελαl, but another objection already lies in the clear indication that the πρετανεία in the army changed every day. So also the Scholiast on Thue. 4. 118 (qu. by Kriiger) has ἡμέρα καθ΄ ἡν ἔχει τις ἔξουσίαν, though the πρετανεία mentioned there are civil officials. If the πρετανεία on the field of battle changed day by day, it can hardly have been identical with, or dependent on, the allotted order of the bulentie prytanies for the year.

It is not in itself improbable that there was a daily change in the order of the Phyles in battle-array, or some rotation of primacy, or dignity, among the phylic regiments, and their commanders, the supreme lead and command of the Polemarch remaining unaffected. Such an arrangement obtained in the army of Alexander the Great, and would have been thoroughly in accord with Athenian spirit (cp. 5, 78 supra). The term in Alexander's army appears to have been hypperia, applied whether to the regiment, or to its commander (cp. Arrian, Inabisis, 1, 14, 6, 28, 3; 5, 13, 4). The προτασή here may correspond to the ήγημοσία there may correspond to the ήγημοσία there he former word being, perhaps, employed in order to avoid clashing with the ήγημοσία of the Polemarch.

If this explanation be adopted, it follows that, on the day of battle, Militiades, with the tribe becommanded, stood on the right wing. What tribe did Militiades command! What tribe stood right, on the day of Marathon? If Militiades belonged to the deme Lakiadai, and if he was in command of his own Phyletai, the Universe was the tribe in question. The attempt (Lugebil, Z. Geschichte d. Stoutsverf. v. Athen, ii. § 17) to show that, in the time of the ten Phylae, Lakiadai may have belonged to the Aiantis, is disproved by C.I.A.

ii. 868, p. 340, where that dome belongs to the Oineis in Ol. 105. 1 = 36059 s.c. From another inscription,
C.I.A. i. 179, it appears that Lakedaimonios (grandson of Miltiades) belonged to Lakiadai, 483-2 s.c. But, is it absolutely certain that Miltimles in 490 n.c. must have been 'settled' in Lakiadai, or, even if so settled, could under no circumstances have com-manded any other Phyle? The Aiantis manded any other Physic I he Maintis is recorded to have occupied the right wing, at the battle of Marathon, upon the authority of Aischylos apud Plutarch, Quaest. Conv. 1. 10 = Moral. 628, cp. Appendix X. § 27. The Philaid Militades would have had special claims upon the Aiantis, named after his heroic ancestor: is it certain after his heroic ancestor: is it certain that he was not in command of that Phyle? (The deme, Philaidai, by the way, belonged to the Aigais.) Anyway, whatever Phyle Miltiades commanded, whatever l'hyle stood on the right wing, beside the Polemarch at Marathon, the word πρωτανηίη may have been used correctly here, even if Heroidstus erroneously took it to mean Herodotus erroneously took it to mean 'supreme command.'

Whether, after the reform of the Polemarchia, the supremacy in the college of Strategi, in the absence of a special psephism or enactment, rotated daily, is a moot question, ep. Plutarch, l.c. supra, Dioderos 13. 97 (Arginusae), 13. 106 (Aigos-potami). See further, Appendix IX. § 14.

111. 3. ἡγέετο . Ιχαν cannot mean merely that the Polemarch stood as extreme man upon the right wing. Perhaps he stood there, but in a position of supreme authority. Lugebil, op. cit. §§ 12 ff., has shown that such was the general rule in Greek armies, but his further argument to show that Hdt. clearly understood the l'olemarch at Marathon to have been commanderin-chief is unacceptable; cp. previous note, and Appendix X. § 5.

5. Listwort is applied to a person of person o (1874) proposed to read at 6Mar polar, following Valla's ceterae teibus. This merges the Phyle in the Polemarch. (instead of first) puts Oineis next the Plataians. In that case Miltides might have commanded or led the might have commanded or led the whole left wing, and we might find the πρότανις on the left, and the ήγγαν on the right. But this combination is Stein⁵ (1882) now argues that, as Hdt. did not write al Adda codal, he must have been ignorant of the tradition that the Aiantis was on the right wing. He regards the tradition as itself untrustworthy: but it has the authority of Aischyles, cp. note supra. As above pointed out it was a coincidence, or an omen, perhaps contrived, that the Aiantis (to which the neigh-bouring Demi and the Folemarch belonged, and which Miltiades, perhaps, commanded) was on the right.

Our conception of the actual order in which the Phylae, or tribes, stood on the day of battle, turns largely on the meaning of the words ώς ἀριθμέοντο. Lugebil, op. cit. § 18, has argued that the words refer to the fixed and official order of the Phylae: the imperfect is ἀλληλέων, τελευταίοι δὲ ἐτάσσοντο ἔχοντες το εὐώνυμον κέρας Πλαταιέες. ἀπὸ ταύτης [γάρ] σφι τῆς μάχης, 'Αθηναίων θυσίας ἀναγόντων ἔς τὰς πανηγύριας τὰς ἐν τῆσι πεντετηρίσι γινομένας, κατεύχεται ὁ κῆρυξ ὁ 'Αθηναίος ἄμα τε 'Αθηναίοισι λέγων γίνεσθαι τὰ ἀγαθὰ καὶ Πλαταιεῦσι. τότε δὲ τασσομένων τῶν τὸ 'Αθηναίων ἐν τῷ Μαραθῶνι ἐγίνετο τοιόνδε τι· τὸ στρατόπεδον ἐξισούμενον τῷ Μηδικῷ στρατοπέδῳ, τὸ μὲν αὐτοῦ μέσον ἐγίνετο ἐπὶ τάξιας ὀλίγας, καὶ ταύτη ἦν ἀσθενέστατον τὸ στρατόπεδον. τὸ δὲ κέρας ἐκάτερον ἔρρωτο πλήθεῖ. ὡς δὲ σφι διετέτακτο καὶ 112

no bar to this interpretation, and the word $d\rho e \partial \mu e \bar{\nu}$ naturally suggests a fixed list; but surely it might equally refer to either order, the changing order of a sortition, or the fixed order of the eatalogue. Either order would be perfectly consistent with a daily change in the consistent with a daily change in the hyperperia or πρετανηίη (see note above). The fixed order of the Phylae was Ercehtheis, Aigeis, Pandionis, Leontis, Akamantis, Oineis, Kekropis, Hippothontis, Aiantis, Antiochis. (Cp. Appendix IX. § 9 ad fiu.) According to Plutarch, Aristeid, 5, the Antiochis and the Leontis were in the centre. If and the Leontis were in the centre. the order of bittle had followed not an allotted but the fixed order of the tribes, Leontis and Antiochis could not have stood together in the centre, or any-where. Lugebil discredits the whole anecdote as a mere fiction to illustrate the neterious rivalry of Themistokles and Aristeides: but the position of the two tribes would be intelligible on the hypothesis of sortition; the rivalry might have been illustrated without bringing the tribes into actual juxta-position. If the order was according to the catalogue, the following inferences are legitimate. Univer Alantis (Miltides) on the right, the tribes would have succeeded as follows: Antiowould have succeeded as follows: Antio-chis (under Aristeides), Erechtheis, Aigeis, Pandionis, Leoutis (with The-mistokles), Akamuntis, Oineis (Mil-tiades!), Kekropis, Hippothontis, Given Oineis (Miltiades) on the right, there follow Kekropis, Hippothontis, Ar-antis (!), Antiochis (Aristeides), and so on, Leontis (Themistokles) being last but one. Given Oineis on the extreme left, Kekropis will be extreme right, Airntis third, Antiochis fourth, Leontis

11. tyivero τοιόνδε τι. This arrangement was hardly an accident. Though it explains and in a way justifies the retreat of the centre, we need not suppose that it was a fiction coined for the purpose, nor is it likely that the numbers of each Phyle varied very much. It is most natural to see in it a result deliberately courted by the Athenian commanders in order to strengthen the wings, and dictated by the nature of the ground (Leake) or by other considerations. Cp. Appendix X. § 37.

13. δλίγας, the usual depth was έπι όκτό. The centre on this eccasion may have been thinned down to three or four. The extra number thus set free were not, we may suppose, massed on the wings, but broagat up to the front in the centre, so as to lengthen the lino of battle, the order of the Phylae remaining unbroken. Thus while the wings—perhaps three Phylae on the right and two Phylae with the Phylains on the left—were eight or more ranks deep, the five Phylae in the centro were, perhaps, only half as deep. But no account is made of light-armed men.

7. Spóppe. What the pace was it is of course impossible to determine. That thousands of hoplites in full armour advanced the best part of a mile at a rapid run without breaking rank (άθρδοι προσέμιξα») seems incredible (cp. H. Delbrück, Die Perserkriege, pp. 55 ff.), whatever single athletes after special training and practice might have ac-complished. Yet this statement is apparently made thrice (ll. 3, 7, 10) in this chapter. A. Mommsen, Heortologie 211, suggests an explanation. Hdt. witnessed the festival on Boedromion 6, and was persuaded, or inferred, that Βοηδρόμια πέμπειν was a commemoration of this charge. The history is an inference from the rite. On the other hand, that a rapid advance was one of the characteristic memories of Marathon need not be doubted (cp. Appendix X. § 27), and δρόμφ might, perhaps, as a military term, be simply opposed to βάδην, cp. 9. 57, and Arrian, Anab. 5.

If this means that the Athenians had absolutely no cavalry, it can hardly be reconciled with the existence of the Solonian irreis, or kππάδα τελούντες, with the alleged supply of two horsemen from each Naukraria (cp. 5. 71 supra), and with general probabilities. In the time of Herodotus the inness were the joy and boast of Athens, immortalised on the Parthenon frieze, glorified on the stage. Cp. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, Aus Kydathen, p. 24, and on the number of the cavalry, Rawlinson n. ad l., 'Aθ. πολ. c. 24, Sandys' note. But even at the best of times the Athenian cavalry was not a very important arm of the service. In 511 B.C., 5. 63 supra, and again later (Thuc. 2. 22, 431 B.C.) Athens relied on Thessalian horsemen. But under the tyrannis the native cavalry had probably been dis-couraged, for political reasons. The conjectures ascribed to the barbarian might fairly be taken to imply that they on their part had cavalry present, they on their part had cavalry present, but no mention is made of it in the action by Hdt. See Appendix X. § 7.

115. 1. ἐπτά. The ships had not been beached, c. 107. The number is probably historical: that only seven ships were taken is an argument for the hypothesis that a good part of the Persian forces were already on board. It would take some time to re-embark many thousands, nay tens of thousands, of men, to say nothing of horses, etc., supposing the whole undiminished forces of the barbarians had been on land, when the battle began. See Appendix X. §§ 34, 38. Cp. H. Droysen, Die Persenkriege, p. 65.

7. ἐοῦσι ήδη ἐν τῆσι νηυσί. If these words are true, and the course of operations hitherto has been correctly rendered by Hdt., it follows that the Persians did not begin to re-embark until after their defeat at Marathon, and that the shield-signal was not displayed until after their re-embarkation was accomplished. What object it could then have served it is difficult to imagine. But, if the re-embarkation of the host had already been begun, if, say, the cavalry had been re-shipped, and perhaps more; if the signal had been shown when a number of the Persians was aboard; we can more easily understand the circumstances which determined the Athenian attack, the need for the hasty return to Athens, the comparatively slight losses, and other points which are otherwise obscure. See further, Appendix X. § 8.

'Αθηναίοι δέ. Some would, however, have been left on the battle-field to guard the bodies and the spoil. Plutarch, Arist. 5, tells us that Aristeides [who could be trusted], with his Phyle, Akamantis, was detached for this service. (Perhaps some of the Plataians too remained.) The other nine tribes marched back to Athens, but not surely the same day. From Marathon to Athens would be a quick march of six to eight hours (26 miles). Plutarch, Mor. 350, has this: Μιλτιάδη μέν γάρ άρας ές Μαραθώνα τη ύστεραίς την μάχην συνάψας ήκεν είς άστυ μετά τής στρατιάς εενικηκώς, i.e. the battle was fought the day after Miltiades left Athens; and he returned, it might seem, on the same day as the battle. Rawlinson misunderstands this passage, taking it to mean that Miltiades re-turned to Athens the day after the battle. Even so, they would have arrived, we may be sure, long before the Persian fleet rounded Sunion. The Athenian forces could not have quitted Marathon until the Strategi were sure

The exact position is uncertain: see Harrison, Mythology and Monuments, p. 216, where are also some suggestive remarks on the dog. (Was it not a totem!) To Herodotus the coincidence here noted is supernatural, ep. 9, 101. Was it from Kynosarges, that the dog came it from Kynosarges that the dog came into the picture in the Stoa! Cp. άπίθανον. These figures are miracles of moderation compared with later exaggerations (see Rawlinson, note and I.), and have an authentic air, though the number of the barbarian dead is admittedly a round number (rard). Among the dead Cicero names Hippias, ad Att. 9, 10, 3; nefarius Hippias, Pisistrati filius, qui in Marathonia pugna cecidit, arma contra patriam ferens. This might be an inference from the disappearance of Hippias from the scene, as nothing more is recorded of him; or an exaggeration of his slip on the sand (c. 107). Some tradition slew Datis: see next chapter. Cp. Appendix X. § 25.

It is for the biographer to record such cases, and for the psychologist to explain them. Actian, N. H. 7. 38, says that Epizelos was depicted in the Poikile. The apparition which struck down his next contrade, according to the statement of Epizelos as reported to the statement of Epizelos as reported to Hdt. (but not in the Poikile: cp. c. 114 supra) and here recorded by him, was of course a fee, and cannot have been taken for Marathon, Echetles, Herakles, or Theseus, all of whom, with Athene, were represented in the Poikile as aiding the Athenians. The story of this statue suggests that the Persians were not quite idle during the two unexplained delays recorded

Where Hdt. heard this story it is not easy to discover. Blakesley says "obviously from Delos." But would the Delians have confessed their wrongful detention of the statue? Is it certain that Datis bade them restore it? As certain, perhaps, as that his action was determined by a dream. The $\theta \epsilon o \pi \rho \phi \pi i o r$ was perhaps Delphic. Justice and piety may perhaps have been the whole motive of this transaction, but one would like to know more about In 470 B.C. Delphi, or the friends of Delphi, may have been thinking that it was time something was done to revive the power and prestige of Thebes, as a make-weight to the growing power of Athens, and the Delian symmachy.

 stades from Susa and 40 from an asphalt + salt + oil spring, should admit of identification. (Cp. Appendix XIII. § 6.) The most successful attempt to localise it is that of Sir H. Rawlinson, quoted in Rawlinson, Hill. Rawlinson, quoted in Rawlinson, Hdt. iii.² p. 496 n. Strabo, 747, places the Eretrians on the upper Tigris, which would contradict Hdt. Hdt. perhaps contradicts himself: at least be places an Anlerikka on the Euphrates, in apper Babylonia, 1. 185. There may of course have been two places of the same name. Rawlinson believes that Apollonius of Tyana conversed in the first century of our era with the descendants of these very Eretrians, and so forth (Philostr. Fit. Apall. 1, 24 ft.), and Grote (iv. p. 50 n.), Rawlinson and others (apparently even Duneker, vii.² p. 118) believe that Hdt. visited the Eretrians at Arderikka and saw the well here described. The expression of καl μέχρε into κτλ. does not justify of wal utype ento ath, does not justify any such inference (cp. 4, 121, and Introduction, pp. liii., xev.), and Hdt. might have smelt petroleum and learnt its Persian name without going to Arderikka. If the description of this well, the method of drawing, and so on, had been beyond Hdt.'s resources, short of autopsy, how much of his work would never have been written! For a description of a wonderful well which he really

If they left on the day after the full moon is on the 15th the after the full moon, i.c. on the 15th, the buttle was fought on the 16th. Plutarch, de Hdti, malig, 26 (Mor. 861), gives 6th of Boodromion as the day of the battle. Boeckh (Mondeyklen der Hellenen, § 15) has shown that the day of the annual Commemoration is substituted in this passage for the actual day of the battle. Isokrates allows them three days and three nights for the 1200 stades (Panegyr. 97), which would bring them to Athens rerapraîos—a sufficiently wonderful performance. They might of course be 'in Attica' without being 'in Athens.' The battle then might have been on Boedr. 17 = Sep. 12. οῦκ ἐνδέκομαι τὸν λόγον, c. 115 supra, op. Introduction, § 22. On the Alkmaionidae and their family history op. note to c. 125 infra. The logic of the historian is at fault in this passage. To prove that the Alkmaionidae were μαστύραντοι he relates the connexion of the family with Kroisos, the first barbarian who reduced Hellenes to slavery. 1. 6, and with Kleisthenes tyrant of Sikyon, and conveniently forgets the connexion and alliance with Peisistratos himself, 1. 60. This excursus on the Alkmaionidae has been suspected. Most editors regard c. 122 as apurious. Blakesley goes so far as to reject cc. 121-124. This is too much or too little, for how explain the introduction of the sequel 125 ff. † How explain the special peculiarities of c. 122 † The passage may well be an addition (by Hdt. himself), and in any case can have been no integral part of the Athenian tradition about the battle of Marathon. The $\phi\theta\delta\nu\sigma$ to which the house was exposed is indeed indicated, but that feeling might be the cause not the effect of this suspicion. If the ode were composed in 489 B.C. Cp. Clinton, Fast. Hell. ad aun. 490 u.c. In the time of Perikles (and Hdt.) the names of Kallias and Hipponikes were very prominent in Athens. About 418 a.c., or perhaps even after the Thirty Years' Truce, took place the aboutive mission of Kallias, son of Hipponikes, to Susa (7. 151, ep. Daneker, Abhandlungen, pp. 37 ff.). His son Hipponikos was Strategos in 426 a.c., Thue. 3. 91. It may be doubted whether our author here has a charmine of the facility at large of the facility at large and the facility at large and the content of the facility at large at the second to t clar view of the family pedigree; but he gives the three names which occur most frequently and prominently in the family annals. Cp. Aristoph. Books 282. The Kallias here specified must of course be sought among the contemporaries of Peisistratos. The allusion in any case is forced. Stein suggests that the Abyor which the historian is discrediting was a family tradition in the house of the Kerykes. There were anec-dotes against the Kerykes themselves, Hesychius sub v. Λακεύπλοιτος (alia testim, apad Petersen, p. 40), but we do not ascribe them to the Alkmaionids.

implicit denial of any Attie war with Lesbos before Peisistrates. In any case the Kerykes may have repossessed themselves of the land again after the expulsion of Hippirs (5. 65 supra).

Two of the weddings in this family were specially celebrated: the marriage of Kallias Lakkoplutos with Elpinike daughter of Miliades (Plutarch, Kim. 3, ep. There is certainly nothing in the matter to discredit its authenticity, and the phraseology, though hersh, can be paralleled out of Herodofus, with one, or perhaps two, exceptions. But (1) the passage fails in some of the best MSS. (the Medican, Florentine, and three others), in fact in one family of MSS. (=a). (2) Plutarch (or the author of the de Malig. Hett.) does not

(3) The sense and grammar are complete without it: καὶ οἱ λλκ. c. 123 ad init. answering to the last sentence of c. 121 Καλλιής τε γάρ κτλ. (4) Though Herodotean in phraseology, the style is abrupt and harsh, from the very multiplication of Herodotean turns: τοῦτο μέτ... τοῦτο δὲ... ἀξοιν μτήμην έχειν... ἀκρος... ἀκρος... ἀκρος... ἀκρος... ἀκρος... ἐκλομενος... ἐκλομ

In the face of these arguments it can hardly be maintained that the passage is of Herodotean authorship. Nor is the forgery a clever one. Lucian would have written the passage better.

It does not therefore follow that the matters of fact mentioned are untrue. The Olympian victories are likely enough even without the authority of the Scholiast on Aristophanes. The wedding of the daughters would have had more verisimilitude if the names of the chosen bridegrooms had been added.

123. 2. δμοίως κτλ., ι.ε. δμοίως τούτω η ούδὲν ήσσον τούτου, 'just as much as, or even more than, this man.' Van Herwerden suggests οἱ <δλλω> 'λλκ., a reading which might seem to involve Hdt. in the error of making Kallias an Alkmaionid.

3. ού προσίεμαι, cp. οὐκ ἐνδέκομαι, c. 121. The λόγοι has become a διαβολή

4. Εφανγον τ. π. χ. Their first exile was due to the εγος 5. 71, and dated before the tyranny. The family had subsequently been on good terms with Peisistratos for a time, 1. 60. It might be argued that (a) a distinction is drawn between Peisistratos and 'the tyrants,' (b) the tyrants are regarded not as a series but as a clique or small dynasty (δυναστεία δλίγων ανδρών Thue. 3. 62) of members of one family.

7. kyé. Thucydides agrees in this judgment on its negative side, against the claims of Harmodios and Aristogeiton 6. 54, but makes little account of the services of the Alkmaionids. Cp. Appendix IX. §§ 3, 4.

Its members were not among those celebrated in connexion with Marathon, nor did that victory apparently do much for their renown. They or their partisans had probably attacked Miltiades unsuccessfully before (c. 104 *supra), and almost certainly attacked him, but that successfully, shortly after (c. 136 *infra). There was that in the past history and relations, in the present attitude of the clan, which might well have seemed to justify suspicions that, sooner than see a rival house of the Pediaei founding

Hdt.'s express judgment is largely discredited by the facts which he has himself preserved in regard to the relations of the Alkmaionidae to Kroisos, to Kleisthenes, to Peisistratos, to Delphi and to Sparta. If this passage is, in-deed, his, it may confirm our distrust of his political judgment. Cp. Introduction, § 22.

6. tyevero yap. II. Delbruck (Die Perserbricae, pp. 59 ff.) has proposed to cancel the whole shield episode: but it appears as one of the most posi-tively attested incidents of the Marathonian campaign. It must fairly be utilised in any attempted reconstruction or rationalisation of the whole story.

See Appendix X. §§ 8, 34.

7. 6 ava66as. To have ascribed the act of treathery to one of the relations or partisans of the Peisistratids still in Athens would surely have been very obvious, if the case against 'the Alkmationids' had not been very strong.

125. l. 'Axquav(8m. There follows here an excursus on the Alkmaionids, the coession of which may perhaps be found in the relationship of Perikles (c. 131 infra) to the house. The proper repre-sentatives of the family in the time of Helt, hardly sustained its old reputation, and perhaps owed their continued importance chiefly to their marriage connexions (through Agariste mother of Perikles, Dinomache wife of Kleinias, mother of Alkibiades, cp. 8, 17, Isodike, wife of Kimon). The sons of Alkmeion are less prominent in later stery; the Euryptolemes son of Peisianax, who figures towards the close of the Peloponnesian war (Xen. Hell. 1, 4, 19 etc.), was a member of the family. Cp. Petersen, Quaretiones pp. 76 ff. The gold of Kroises was not the beginning of the fortune of the family. Its members were already influential at Delphi (here, and cp. Plutareh, Seden 11, Ad. wok. c. 19), and already responsible for the Kylonian Gyor 5, 71 supra. Relations between the Alkmeionids and the Mermusulae wife of Kimon). The sons of Alkmerion the Alkinaionids and the Merimuelae need be doubted as little as relations with Delphi, though their obvious significance is not realised by the story-teller, and the favours of Kroisus are made a comedy. The chronological data, however, are contosed. On the remoter original of the house, see Toepffer, Attisch, Geneal, 225 ff.

3. Αλκμέων ὁ Μεγακλίος. If Alkmaion assisted Lydian envoys at Delphi they were sent by Alyattes (cp. 1, 25) rather than by Kroisos, for the marriage of Megakles and Agariste took place before Kroisos ascended the throne, circa 560 n.c. Kleisthenes of Sikyon died circa 570 a.c. If any member of the house supported Kroises it was Megakles. The Marmor Parium dates the musion of Kroisas to Delphi 566 B.c. But Kroisas may have sent more

126. 1. γενεή δευτέρη δστερον involves a blunder somewhere. The wedding of Agariste must have taken place before the accession of Kroisos. See preceding chapter. The explanation of the blunder may be that the friendship of Alyattes and Alkmaion (πρώτη γενεή) was succeeded by the wedding of Megakles and Agariste (δευτέρη γενεή), but the substitution of the name of Kroisos for

Alyattes above has involved the anachronism here: the former and the latter story being from different sources.

Whether Hdt. or his source ('some ingenious Athenian') is accountable Grote does not clearly say. Stein Grote does not clearly say. Stein suggests that the story comes from a Pindaric poem. Cp. Kirchhoff, Entstehungszeit, p. 43. If the poem was an Epinikion (cp. Pyth. 7), to judge by the existing samples the mythos must have been very freely articulated and transformed by Herodotus. Points in the story indicate an Italiote source, or at least an Italiote interest (cp. Zühlke, De Agaristes nuptiis, pp. 30 ff.) which would be sufficiently accounted for, if the story was first coined or circulated about the date of the founding of Thurii.

Corinth and Thebes are conspicuous by their absence, to say nothing of Sparta. The Ionians of Asia are unrepresented. The synchronisms are peculiar: the florait of Sikyon under are peculiar; the floruit of Sikyon under Kleisthenes (of Argos under Pheidon), of Sybaris and of Eretris each and all coincide, cp. c. 21 supra. See further the notes on the particular names.

3. ἡ δὲ Σύβαρις ήκμαζε. The aemo of Sybaris might counside with the revival of the Achain and Ionian elements in the Peloponnese: and there would be a special suitability in the Achaian towns of Italy sending representatives to Sikyon. Kroton, however, is not represented: perhaps naturally enough. Cp. c. 21 supra. Athenacus xii. 511 preserves a (lietitious) embellishment to the effect that Smindyrides took a thousand fowlers and a thousand cooks with him on this occasion. Aneedotes illustrative of the luxury of Sybaris were afterwards attached to his name. (See Rawlinson, note ad l., Zühlke, ep. c. p. 17.)

Suidas ('Αμιριε μαθεται) says that Amyris alone understood the oracle foretelling the fall of Sybaris, sold all his property, and went to Peleponnesse. The Sybarites thought him his property, and there is nesses. The Syberites thought him mad. Afterwards (on the destruction of the city!) he was much admired. This would bring Amyris down to the close of the century. On Siris ep. 8, 62, 7, Terópuov. Later legend (Achan, V. H. xii, 22) makes Titermos contemposars with Milan of Krotena; it cannot porary with Milon of Krotona: it cannot be said that Hdt. commits this ana-chronism, if it be an anachronism.

wats P. The appearance of a son

Pheidon among the suitors has been objected to on three grounds: (1) as an anachronism. Pheidon's date has been put approximately from one to two centuries before Kleisthenes, the Olympiad referred to below being taken for the 8th = 748 B.C., or the 28th = 668 B.C. Though some of the suitors were older than others (c. 128), none can have been so old as this! (2) The anti-Argive policy of Kleisthenes makes a suitor from Argos out of place (cp. 5. 67 supra). (3) A Dorian suitor spoils the otherwise non-Dorian complexion of the list. Even if the anachronism were avoidable the argument remains against believing that a son of the Dorian despot of Argos was among the suitors of Agariste; but neither anachronism nor improbability proves the unauthenticity of the passage. Van Herwerden drops παι̂s with RSV (= β).

Φείδωνος δὶ τοῦ τὰ μέτρα ποιήσαντος Πελοποννησίουσι. Pheidon,
in the Peloponnesos,' was despot of Argos and extended his power to Olympia, can be none other than the greatest of the Temenid kings. It is to be observed that Hdt. ascribes to Pheidon only the 'measures'; Ephoros was the first to make him author of the 'Aiginetan' coinage. Cp. Busolt, Gr.
G. i. 143. Rawlinson admits a blunder on Hdt.'s part, but accepts the theory of there having been two Pheidons, a theory invented to avoid the anachronism (by Müller, Aigineticorum Liber, p.
60). But at that rate we shall want three or four Pheidons: see following note.

Beloch, Gr. Gesch. i. 216 n. (1893), suggests that the introduction of 'measures' may have been ascribed to Pheidon, because there was in Argos a measure called a pheidon, Pollux, 10. 179 (ed. Bekker, p. 448). Is it not much more probable that the measure was named after the man?

The plan of dropping the passage

Φelδωνος δὲ κτλ. to save Hdt. from anachronism is a product of criticism in extremis; better at once rewrite the passage, dπὸ δὲ Π. τοῦ ᾿Αργείου τ. παῖς Α. Φεlδωνος δὲ ἀπόγονος τοῦ κτλ. But this too is desperate and unnecessary. If anything goes out, we must get rid of the whole passage from the first Φείδωνος down to παῖς καὶ and read dπὸ δὲ Πελοποντήσου ᾿Αμίαντος κτλ., not in order that we may save Hdt. from anachronism, but that we may reduce the suitors to a dozen, and be rid of the Dorian. But what reason can be shown for curing Hdt. of parapragmatism (cp. 5. 45), or where would the process begin and and ?

ism (cp. 5. 45), or where would the process begin and end?

13. atrès tèr 'Odumin dysra têna. The determination of the Olymins. piad of Pheidon is undoubtedly one of the most fascinating problems in Greek chronology. Neither the evidence nor the argument can be here fully exhibited. It must suffice to say that (i) if the text of Hdt. be genuine, and the statement correct, Pheidon would have to be regarded as contemporary with Kleisthenes of Sikyon. His Olympiad would then fall into the sixth century. (Busolt has shown indeed that if Pheidon expelled the Eleian Agonothetae, as Hdt. asserts, the Olympiad of Pheidon would fall subsequently to Ol. 72=572 B.C., Gr. Gesch. i. 2 612 n.) Some recent authorities (Trieber, Beloch) have declared for this date, and Beloch even brings Pheidon to the throne 585 B.c. (Busolt, l.c.). This date practically rests upon the authority of Hdt. and in this connexion that authority is almost worthless. One historical agreement might be adduced in its favour. If Pheidon belonged to the sixth century he might have been the first to coin money in Greece proper (so Ridgway, Origin of Currency, p. 215): but the evidence that Pheidon coined money is also practically worthless: (a) The Marmor Parium, which however dates Pheidon, and therefore his coinage, 895 B.C.; (b) (Ephoros apud) Strab. 376, who was probably the author of the combination originally. A combination is not necessarily wrong, but against this one, the motives for which are transparent (cp. Busolt, Gr. (7. i.1 115), may be set the great improbability of the synchronism of Phei-don = Kleisthenes (= Periandros), to say nothing of having to date the institution of the dyar by Pheidon intolerably

άγωνα έθηκε τούτου τε δή παις και 'Αμίαντος Λυκούργου 'Αρκάς έκ Τραπεζούντος, καὶ 'Αζήν έκ Παίου πόλιος Λαφάνης Εύφο- 15

(ii) In contrast to the clear statement by Hdt. and the inferences to be based thereon, there is a still clearer statement by Pausanias 6. clearer statement by Pausanias 6.
22, 2, according to which the Olympiad of Pheidon is the 8th = 748 s.c.
This date has been very generally accepted, even by critical historians, e.g. Clinton (F. H. ad ann.), Grote (ii. 237), Duncker (Gesch. de Merth. v. 547), Busoit (Die Lakedaimmeier, i. 2547), Busoit (D tentatively, Gr. Gesch. i. 1145 decidedly), Holm (Gesch, Gr. i. 211 = Engl. Tr. i. 215), and others. But unfortunately Pausanius has marred his own authority by making Pheidon co-operate with the Pisnei, or Pisatae, instead of allowing him (as does Hdt.) to be his own Agonothetes (Hellanodikes). There is no so great (Bor in putting in the Pisatae for the Eleians! Pausanias' statement plainly rests on combina-tions, and apparently again on Epheros (who in this neutrer is already discredited), for Ephoros made Pacidon δέκατος ἀπὸ Τημέκου. (Busolt, Gr. G. i. 2 619, regards the 8th Ol. as a date exeogitated subsequently to Ephoros, in connexion with the Argivo-Macedonian genealogies and legends. See further,

(iv) infin.)

(iii) By an emendation of Pausanias (usually attributed to Weissenborn, but now by Busolt, i.² 611 n.², restored to our own Falconer) the 8th was converted into the 28th Olympiad converted into the 28th Olympiad = 668 n.c. This date is adopted by Cartius, &r. &. i. 215, as "the most probable hypothesis" (cp. p. 239 and the note on p. 660. Cp. Engl. Tr. i. 235). It is a curious coincidence, any way, that Ol. 28 was, according to tradition, celebrated by the Pisatae, not by the Eleians (cp. Clinton, Fasti, i. 190 ad ann.). It would be easy to understand the substitution of the Pisatae for Pheidon in tradition, all the more seeing that the Clympiad of the more seeing that the Clympiad of Pheidon was an Anolympiad (Pausan. I. c.). It may be, indeed, that the exact figure of the Olympiad of Pheidan is: unattainable (ep. Bury, Neman Odes of Pindar, Appendix P. p. 256), but the Olympiad of Pheidan was certainly the 25th or thereabouts, reckoning the Olympiads according to the conventional Anagraphe. For Mr. Bury (ep. cit.) has made it probable that not only did Pheidon celebrate an Olympiad, but that he was the historic founder of the Agon: his Olympiad was virtually the first (pan-Hellenie) celebration. This conclusion has an important bearing upon the approximate date: it is an argument against lowering the date, so as to make Phei-don contemporary with Kleisthenes of Sikyon. The ascertained date for the first Pythian (pan-Hellenie) celebration is $85 s.c. But the Olympian had been of a surety in full swing a long time before that. The historical per-spective, the political situation in Peloponnesos so far as ascertainable, favours the fixture of the Olympiad of Pheidon about the middle of the seventh cen-tury. (This is likewise the mature judgment of Busolt, Gr. G. i. 2 623.) For conventional purposes Ol. 28 is the most suitable as the Olympiad of Pheidon.

(iv) Some traditions tended to throw Pheidon back even before Ol. 8 and to make him contemporary with Lykurgos = Iphitos, or even earlier. These need not here be further discussed. Buselt in his masterly analysis of what may be called the stratefication of traditions on this subject (Gr. G. i. 2 612 ff.) has shown that these particular develop-ments belong to the Macadonian period, and are connected with the Helleno-Herakleid legend of the Macedonian house (cp. 5, 22 supra). The ancient house (cp. 5, 22 supra). authorities may be found conveniently in Clinton, Fasti, i. Appendix 1. 16. δε λόγος έν 'Αρκαδίη λέγεται. Hdt. does not believe this story, cp. 4. 173 supra. Four stadii from the city of Kleitor was a temple of the Dioskuri (Pausan. 8. 21, 4), and their figures appear on fifth-century coins (J. H. S. vii. 102, Immerwahr, Kulte u. Mythen Arkad. 229).

128. 3. dvenúbero. If an Epic poem was Hdt.'s main source for the story, probably Kleisthenes was represented as extracting from his visitors the information given just above in the text, c. 127. The subjects in which the suitors were tested (dνδραγαθίη, δργή, παίδευσις, τρύπος) are characteristic.

10. Ίπποκλείδης. Hippokleides son of Tisandros is related to the Kypselidae of Corinth. At Athens his father is plainly contemporary with Kypselos father of Miltiades the Philaid, c. 35 supra. The inference is certainly tempting that Tisandros was a Philaid, and that the Philaidae had connexion with the Kypselids. The Kypselids traced themselves back to Kaineus the Lapith, 5. 92 supra. Lysidike the mother of Philaios was counted a descendant of Kaineus. Cp. Petersen, Hist. Gent. Attic. iv.

10. νόμοισι τοΐσι 'Αθηναίων. It is not quite clear what were the marriage laws of the Athenians in the year 570 B.C. or thereabouts. The Solonian legislation may have been just enacted: but our knowledge of the domestic institutions of Athens is mainly for the fourth century, when much was ascribed to Solon which was of later institution, dating even after the Archonship of Eukleides. It is possible that at the date of the wedding of Agariste kinship through the mother was still strongly recognised at Athens (cp. c. 103 supra). M'Lennan even argues acutely that at Athens the system of female kinship regulated to some extent marriage after it had lost importance in regard to succession (Studies in Ancient History, New Ed. It is remarkable that the name of Kleisthenes is transferred from the μητροπάτωρ to the θυγατριδέος (5. 67, supra, cp. next chapter). By the strict letter of the later law Kleisthenes himself would have been $\nu \delta \theta \sigma$ s. (Cp. $^{\prime}A\theta \eta \nu$. $\pi o \lambda$. cc. 26, 42, Aristot. Pol. 3. 5, 8, 1278a.) On the other hand it can hardly be doubted that the Solonian legislation tended in the direction of the patria potestas, and probably to some extent damnified the position of women at Athens. In that case, perhaps, Kleisthenes was making some concession, on his daughter's behalf, in conforming to the Attic marriage law of the day. He performs the εγγύησις, and he no doubt gave, with his daughter's hand, the indispensable dowry (προξ). As, however, this speech is scarcely historic, but may be taken to represent Alkmaionid tradition about the middle of the fifth century B.C., the formula would necessarily suggest conformity to the growing strictness of the domestic institutions, though it practically proves that the strict law above cited cannot have been in force at the time of the wedding. Cp. Duncker, Ein angebliches Gesetz des Perikles, in his Abhandlungen, 1887. On Attic marriage and family law generally: Texts—Petitus, Leges Atticas, Liber sextus (Parisiis 1635), Meursius, Themis Attica (ap. Gronov. 11. ἐκεκύρωτο ὁ γάμος. N.B. the tense. Cp. 5. 78 supra. E. Hruzs, Die Ehebegründung nach attischem Recht (1892), proves that the terms έγγνῶ, έγγνασθαι denote acts constituting a legitimate marriage-contract (§ 3), and argues, from their occurrence in this story, that they date back to Solon (it. p. 44). Cp. further, op. cit. § 6. The εγγύησις is a contract between the father (or other κύριος) and the bridegroom: for the \gamma\duor the presence of the bride is necessary. The formulae used by Kleisthenes and Megakles are next note. Whether he was the elder of the two sons it is not easy to determine. The pedigree of the Alkmaionids as given by Rawlinson, note ad l., is so far misleading as it exhibits Perikles, Alkibiades, et al. as members of the clan. The proper genealogy of Perikles would of course be reckoned $\pi a \tau \rho \delta \theta \epsilon \nu$. Cp. c. 14 supra. He and his ancestors belonged to the family of the Buzygai, a priestly house, connected with Eleusia. See Petersen, Historia gent. Attic. pp. 131 ff., Toepffer, Attisch. Geneal. pp. 136 f. On Xanthippos see further c. 136 infra. That he was among the friends of Kleisthenes and the Alkmaionid party seems obvious. of Perikles may be placed conjecturally about 493/2 n.c. (Dancker, viii. 245, ix. 3). This suits well enough with the date of his political dibut ('Aθ. πολ. c. 27). That he was not the oblest son of Xunthippos may be inferred from the fact that he had a brother named Ariphron, after the grandfather. The forty years of l'erikles' primacy (quadraginta annos praefuit Athenis, Cie. de Ovat. 3. 138, cp. Plutarch, Perik. 16. 2 τεσσαράκοντα μέν δτη πρωτεων), which would put his first appearance back at least to 469 B.c. and his birth perhaps to 499 B.c., is artificial, exaggerated, and scarcely consistent with the indica-tions in Plut. Perik. 7. If the first arrangia of Perikles is rightly dated to 462 s.c. (Duncker, viii. 247) it would support the later figure (493) as the date of his birth.

9. Movra. Stein quotes the eracular paredy in Aristophanes, Knights, 1037 (424 s.c.). In this allusion to
'the Lion of the House of Nanthippes' who can full to find a key to the pro-minence of the family stories of the Alkantionists in the whole context be-fore us? Perikles is nowhere else named by Hdt., and it is natural to suppose that special circumstances at the time when Hdt. was writing had emphasised the connexion of Perikles with the 'accursed' house (ep. 5, 70 f. supra); but it is difficult to imagine that Perikles was dead (429 n.c.) when this story was written. The whole passage, ce. 121-161, or 126-131, might very well be a vaper@pkm made after 482 n.c. and before 428 n.c. 132. 1, perf. How long after Hdt.

What secret commission of Miltiades. What secret commission of Militades. What he represents as a freebooting adventure admits of being interpreted as a legitimate and well-designed act of policy. See Appendix XI. § 4. On his own showing the present would have been an appropriate place for a remark on the folly of the Athenians (cp. 1. 00, 5. 97), but something kept him from it: unless the words reference temperature is a consure; such exaltation usually preceding a fall, cp. 4, 120, 5, 91 supra preceding a fall, cp. 4. 130, 5. 91 supra.

133. 2. Πάρον (cp. Smith, Dict. Geogr. sub v. and Bent, Cyclades, c. xv). Paros, once only second to Naxos among the Kyklades ("traces of a vast population in former ages"), doing a brisk trade in its choice marble (3. 57, 5. 62), on good terms with Miletos before the great revolt (5. 27, 28), regarded as the metropolis of Thasos (Thuc. 4. 104, 4), was never more flourishing than in the days of Miltiades, and still in the days of Hdt. was paying 16 T. tribute to Athens (cp. C. I. A. i. 234), "twice as much as Naxos, Andros, and other larger islands" (Bent, p. 372). Paros presumably had profited by the fall of Naxos, and had made good terms with the Persians. It is likely enough that the Parians had taken part in the Marathonian campaign. Athenian tradition afterwards represented them as unpatriotic time-servers (8. 67, was never more flourishing than in as unpatriotic time-servers (8. 67, 112). That Miltiades should have been angry with a Parian for reporting evil of him to Hydarnes, and should seek to avenge the insult on the whole community, is not very probable. Was the victor of Marathon, the hero of the Danube, so anxious to stand well with the Persians? Good political and military reasons can be found for the expedition to Paros. See Appendix mpórepos. Stein suggests the addi-

6. Hepony. How Lysagoras the Parian came into relations with Hydarnes is not stated. In regard to Hydarnes, it would perhaps be safe to infer that he was the commander of the Immortals, cp. 7. 83 and passim, but especially c. 135.

8. exator. One hundred T. would have defrayed the expenses of the expedition, perhaps twice over. (Cp. Appendix XI. § 6.) Miltiades may have demanded gold, c. 132 supra, though Hdt. here thinks only of silver (even if with Krüger αργύριον is removed). It was just the amount which Sikyon had (according to Hdt.'s authorities) paid, not long before, to Argos for an offence, similar in kind, but surely less in degree, c. 92 supra.

134. 1. ol πάντες Έλληνες. It can hardly be supposed that more is meant by this expression than that Hdt. has not met with any variant or contrary tradition on the course of events so far. With what follows the case is different: he gives, for some reason or other, a local Parian tradition, and that tradition was at variance presumably with the 'pan-Hellenic' version. But it had local colour, it had a Delphic reference, it had a good moral in its favour. See further, Appendix XI. § 3. The local Parian tradition only includes cc. 134,

The Athenian tradition held that the injury was to the thigh, and Hdt., believing this to be the fact, has apparently introduced it just above as the better Parian tradition. Cp. c. 136 infra. It would be easy to 'reconcile' the conflict of anthorities. If Miltirdes had been rounded in the thigh he would have been all the more likely to come to grief in jumping the enclosure wall: but this is saving the letter to spoil the spirit of the rival traditions.

Cp. 4. 15 (where Delphi endorses the credentials of a φάσμα) and cc. 69, 117 supra for other φάσματα. The subject is κατηγεμόνα, cp. κατηγήσατο supra. ἡγεμονὶς is the proper feminine of ἡγεμόν, but is not used of persons, while ἡγεμόνη is a divine title. (Cp. L. & S. sub vv.)

β. σηπομένου, cp. σφακελίσαντός τε

τοῦ μηροῦ καὶ σαπέντος infra. How his limb should have mortified from a sprain (σπασθήναι c. 134) it is not easy to understand, though the same diffi-culty does not attend the case of Kambyses (3. 66 έσφακέλισε τε το δστέον και by sec (s. to the third for the solution of $\mu\eta\rho\delta s$. . $\ell\sigma\delta\pi\eta$), who was wounded. Hence the significance of the Scholion (quoted by Baehr, note to c. 134) to Aristid. p. 218, to the effect that Miltiades was wounded in the thigh by a dart, launched by an unseen hand, which struck him as he was besieging Paros. Cp. C. Nepos, c. 7 (= Ephoros) aeger erat vulneribus, quae in oppug-nando oppido acceperat. Cp. Appendix

7. of paor. It would be interesting to know their names. Cornelius Nepos has: verba pro eo fecit frater eius Tisagoras, c. 7. His brother Stesagoras predeceased him, c. 38 supra. The omission of his service at the Istros is noticeable (cp. 4. 137 supra). That, however, was not a direct service to Athens, and had besides already done duty on a similar occasion perhaps, cp. c. 104 supra. His acquisition of Lemnos might have been expected to have served also at the previous trial. It is just possible that the reference to it here is unhistorical, and introduced by Hdt. as a peg on which to hang the story of the Athenian acquisition of Lemnos. Ed. Meyer, Forschungen, p. 16, even suggests that it was, perhaps, Miltiades Cypseli who first acquired Lemnos (for Peisistratos), in which case the achievement can hardly have done duty at either trial of Miltiades Cimonis: but the suggestion is unverifiable.

^{3.} Ξάνθιππος. We may infer from this passage that (1) Xanthippos was the accuser; (2) the impeachment was dπατήσεως τοῦ δήμου: cp. Meier and Schömann, Der Attische Process, p. 344. (It was a variety of the γραφή προδοσίας. At least such would have been its later supra, and the reference to Plato

11. ката . . ката. In slightly different senses: the first suggesting a result, the second a cause. Or, the two might be covered by the accusative of respect. Cp. Kuhner, Ausfahrl. Gramm. d. Gr. Spr. § 433, where this instance is not quoted.

12. ταλάντοιτι. Grote, in a well-known passage (iv. pp. 53 ff., Pt. ii. c. xxxvi.), has argued that the γραφή must have been τιμητός and that the nust have been right and that the people, after the verdict of guilty, had no choice but to accept one of the alternatives. Moier and Schomann, l. c. s., represent the \(\gamma_{t}a\text{c}\psi\) mpolosias as \(\lambda i\text{lipto}\), regarding the death penalty as fixed, on the ground that \(\pi\)polosias to does not admit of degrees; but considering the way the Athenians classified homeicide we may be sure thay fied homicide we may be sure they would have been able to discriminate high treason from treason felony! Plato, Gerg. 516, seems to suggest that Milti-ades only escaped by the casting vote of the Prytanis, if, indeed, that re-ference be historic, or referable to this occasion. Hdt. does not say that Miltiades could not have paid the line Milliades could not have paid the line had he lived. On the payment, cp. Plutarch's Kinnen 4, which explains where Kinnen got the money. On the end of Milliades, see further Appendix XI. § 6. 137. 1. επέτε. Cp. S. 44, 1. 57. 3. ούκ έχω. A conteast to Hekataios, who determined the question against Atlens. This notice would not have been a good advertisement for the Ionian's works at Athens, unless, indeed, there were some good men anxious to rake up old sins and do penance therefor: a form of patriotism which the Greeks do not seem to have cultivated much.

τὰ λεγόμενα includes written authority (Hekataios έφησε ἐν τοῖοι λόγοιοι λέγων) and oral tradition τώς δὲ αὐτοὶ 'All. Meyorar), if, indeed, the latter version was not also in writing. Cp. Introduction, § 20.

5. ênelre vap . . 'Abqualous. Practically a quotation from Hekatains, and, as Blakesley remarks, aplacai roise-cems to show that Hekatains had the story from 'Pelasgian' (Lemnian) sources. 7. κοτε. The word can hardly be used with reference to the writer's own day. It might almost seem as if the wall had been built long before the grant of land was made. Anyway the kere here marks a different epoch to the words τοῦτου τὰν χρίνον ἰαξια. According to Strabo, 401 (Hekataios I), these Pelasgi came into Atties from Bosotia, driven forth by the invading Bocotians. The wall is named τὸ Heλασγικὸν τέιχον 5. 64 καρνα, but the better form was undoubtedly τὸ Heλασγικὸν. Cp. Appendix IX. § 4.

11. ὡς δὶ ... 'Αθηναίοι λέγουσε. Pel. Meyer, Forsshampon, p. 8, argues that there was no genuine Attie tradition in regard to the Pelasgi in Atties, and that we have in Helt, merely an Attie reply to the charge of Hekataios. If Pelasgi were here marks a different epoch to were never in Attica, they could not have built the wall round the Akropolis: who, then, did build it? Certainly it was built in primitive prae-Hellenic, or proto-Hellenic, i.e. 'Pelasgic,' times. The story of its building may be fabulous, and the comings and goings of the 'Pelasgi' are more or less pragmatic: but has Meyer shown that the Pelasgi should be reduced to the rank of a merely regulative idea? The last word on the Pelasgian question is not yet spoken: cp. Mr. Arthur Evans' forthcoming paper in J. H. S. 1895.

forthcoming paper in J. H. S. 1895.

14. Evvetkpouvov. There is an anachronism in calling the source by this name. The older name (to which the present has reverted) was Kallirrhoë. It was only in the days of Peisistratos that the spot was walled in and renamed, Thucyd. 2. 15, 5. In regard to its exact topographic position there has long raged a notorious controversy. Herodotus in this passage plainly implies that Kallirrhoë, or rather Enneakrunos, was outside the city (of old), and in the direction of Hymettos. As a general indication this site squares with the passage of Thucydides, where he is describing buildings and objects outside the old πόλις, which term is explained to mean ή ἀκρόπολις καὶ τὸ ὑπ' αὐτὴν πρὸς νότον μάλιστα τετραμμένον. The archaic Kallirrhoë, the sources of Enneakrunos, must therefore be sought outside the ancient city, to the south of the Akropolis, in proximity to the Olympieion (ἐγγὸς οὐση Thuc. l. c.). These indications place Kallirrhoë implicitly on or near the Ilissos, and so Plato, Axioch. 364 expressly εξιόντι μοι ές Κυνόσαργες και γενομένω μοι κατά τον Ίλισσον . Κλεινίαν όρω τον 'Αξιόχου θέοντα έπι Καλλιρρόην . . . But Pausanias 1. 14, 1 mentions Enneakrunos in the neighbourhood of an Odeion (cp. 8. 6), apparently in his tour of the Agora, though in a passage riddled with literary digressions, and full of small topographical uncertainties. Hence an apparent conflict of authority between Pausanias on the one part and Thucydides et al. on the other: was Enneakrunos in the Agora, where Pausanias places it, or on the Ilissos, where Herodotus, Thucydides et al. place it? The following points are clear: there was a Kallirhoë on the Ilissos, which Hdt. and Thuc. identify with Enneakrunos. There was a fountain (appra) in the Agora, which Pausanias identifies with Enneakrunos. If there is any error here, it must be with Pausanias, not with Thucydides. The only possible reconciliation lies in the theory that there was a connexion between the springs on the Ilissos and the fountain in the Agora, a connexion established by Peisistratos, and that Thucydides is speaking of one end of the aqueduct, Pausanias of the other. Dr. Dörpfeld claims to have discovered the conduit in situ. See Harrison and Verrall, Mythology and Monuments, pp. 87-91, Curtius, Stadtgeschichte, pp. v, 87, etc., E. Gardner, in J. H. S. xiii. pp. 139 ff. (1893), xiv. pp. 224 ff. (1894).

οδ γάρ.. olkéras. In the Homeric poems slavery is an established institution. Does τοθτον τὸν χοδνον refer to an age anterior to the Trojan war? Strabo (l. c. supra) dates it to the Boeotian invasion, i.e. after (60 years after, Thuc. 1. 12) the Trojan war. Hdt. 4. 145 supports the view that the expulsion of the Pelasgi took place after the Trojan war. There is then an anachronism in this Athenian tradition, which seems to imply that there were no slaves in Greece, nearly a century after the Trojan war. On the other hand the recognition of a period when slavery was not, and the association of that period with the 'Pelasgian' type, are significant points in Attic tradition. It is to be noticed that the antithesis between Athenian and Pelasgian is pronounced in both versions. Cp. 8. 44, 1. 57.

4. 'A0nyalov. The statement implies (1) the syncikism, and so probably an anachronism; (2) the antiquity of the (Athenian) cult of Artemis in Brauron. It is thus inconsistent with the Athenian legend, as found in Euripides, Iphin, in Touris, 1435 ff., which identifies the image at Brauron with the Taurie Artemis, and represents it as brought there by Orestes. (The Brauroman rite was Arctic if not Taurie) It was, indeed, a pre-Hellenie cult, and likely enough 'Felasgian' property: the ritual involving a dance in learnessians. It was a rural festival, presumably instituted by a pasteral people; and if there were lions in Paionia in the days of Herodotus (7, 125) there may have been bears on Hymettes in 'Pelasgian' times. In Hdt.'s time, perhaps since the time of Peisistrates, the Brauronian goddess had a smetuary on the Akropolis, the remains of which are still visible; and it was in the Akropolis that the Athenian girls were initiated; probably yearly on the 16th of Munychion. This may have been the date of the rural festival in Brauron, which at any rate would be a Spring festival and in the sea-lating season, and perhaps annual; but in later times at least it was only a πεντετηρίε. (Perhaps already so in Hdt.'s day; hence eð έξεπενταμενεί τα λθηναίων δριάν with special significance.) Cp. A. Monunsen, Heartologue, pp. 403 tf.; Harrison, Muthadony and Monuvents, pp. 395 tf.; Lang, Muthand Britand, ii. 212 tf. (With the ritual described, Eurip. Iph. in Toures, 1458 tf., ep. the rite of the 'Shrove-Tide Bear, Frazer, Golden Bengh, i. 251.)

6. παλλακάς. The legend seems to suggest one frequent origin, at one of domestic slavery and of polygamy. For the rest, the fate of the Attic mothers and their sons of course justified the Athenian conquest of Lemmos; and the case is an instance of the political utility of myths and legends.

ἐπεμπον. A theoria from 'Pelasgic' Lemnos to Delphi, and a Delphic response so much to the advantage of Athens, are suggestive traditions. The whole story is presumably from Athenian sources. The oracle had not been fulfilled—perhaps not even recorded—when Hekataios wrote the passage quoted c. 137 supra. The divine behest: 'Αθηναίουι δίκας διδύναι ταύτας τὰς ὰν αὐτοὶ 'Αθηναίοι δικάσωσι providentially anticipates the practice of imperial Athens towards her Symmachy. The phraseology and even the argument in this story smack of Attic jurisprudence: cp. ἐπιβουλεύοντας . ἐπ' αὐτοφώρφ c. 137 supra, and its legal consequence. Political claims are also insinuated, e.g. ἀρχειν (bis) c. 138 supra.

^{20.} δμα seems to imply that Thoas shared the common fate. Rawlinson, indeed, translates: "in the days of Thoas," perhaps to reconcile Hdt. with the ordinary tradition, according to which Thoas was saved by his daughter Hypsipyle. Cp. Apoll. 1. 9, 17. 14. πρὸς νότον πολλόν, about 140 iles. Rawlinson thinks a trireme might have achieved the voyage abrnμερόν, but not βορέη ἀνέμφ. Mr. Tozer (Islands of the Aegean, p. 236) reports the interesting observation that with a north wind the current of the Hellespont sets with great force towards Lemnos, but towards Imbros when the wind is S. Still, one or other of the terms would have been superfluous in the original situation, when buertpy stood for Attica: and βορέη ἀνέμφ has the more primitive look.

The chronological and other relations between the Persian acquisition of Lemnos (5. 26 supra) and the 'Athenian, are not stated, nor is the problem present to the mind of Hdt., the two stories being told in different connexions, and from different sources: but, if the voyage of Miltiades was subsequent to the visitation of Otanes, then it may have been from the Persians that Miltiades wrested the island. But see infra. The case is a fresh illustration of the use made for political purposes of the mythical and legendary traditions. Cp. c. 138. l. 6 supra.

phaistia surrendered and that Myrina afterwards stood a siege. Steph. Byz. drawing on Charax records that Myrina was besieged and captured and that Hephaistia then surrendered. By an emendation of Valckenaer's, Hermon is emendation of Valckenaer's, Hermon is made tyrant of Hephaistia and surrenders it. The date of the annexation is to be placed during the Ionian revolt (pace Ed. Meyer, Forschungen, p. 16). Cp. 5. 26 supra. But the island of course passed again out of the control of Athens, or of Miltiades, cp. c. 31 supra, and Lemnians served in the fleet of Xerxes, though the Athenian connexion was not without effect on connexion was not without effect, cp. 8. 11. Hephaistia and Myrina were the two towns on the island, N. and W., the former named after the god to whom former named after the god to whom the volcanic Lemnos was sacred (cp. 17. 1. 594). Myrina, however (the modern Kastro), "occupies a striking position which marks it out as the natural capital of the island" (Tozer, op. c. p. 240). The only remains of the town now, "a splendid piece of cyclopean masonry" (ib. p. 246). The position of Hephaistia, Tozer observes p. 268, was convenient for commerce, but not defensively strong. It appears in the Athenian Tribute-lists to have paid nearly twice as much as Myrina (not to be confused with Myrina by Kyme). On the traditional volcanic claims of Lemnos, consult Tozer, op. c.

9. core 84. The story of the acquisition of Lemnos by the Athenians is introduced by Hdt. with extraordinary skill, for an artistic purpose. (1) After the miserable end of the (reputed) victor of Marathon these more heroic incidents restore tone and cheer to the narrative. (2) The story gives Hdt. an opportunity for a Parthian shot at Hekataios, to whom he has been a good deal more indebted in these Books than appears on the surface. (3) The story forms an absolute pause in the general course of the main history, and an emphatic break between the sixth and seventh Books as we have them.

As the whole work closes with a biographical anecdote (9. 122) which serves at once to sum up the moral of the great war (Bks. 7, 8, 9) and to link the end with the beginning in the person of Kyros, so does Hdt. close this part of his work, the second of his three volumes, with a passage which emphasises the superiority of truly Hellenic (Attic) culture over the cruelty and roughness of uncivilisation, to the description of which so much of this volume has been devoted. If such things are accidental, they are accidents of genius. Cp. Introduction, § 3.
